Sherman Alexie's War Dances

SARAH WYMAN

I

Sherman Alexie's collection of stories and poems, War Dances (2009), plays with fictions, with the art of constructing stories, identities, and, thus, interpretations of the world.¹ By probing the juncture between reality and representation, Alexie asks the oldest questions in a fresh, new voice: How do we attempt to know each other and to narrate experience? He launches investigations into the power of the imagination and the tricky reach of language as it articulates lived lives and selves. His polyphonic text enters the canons of contemporary US and world literature, where it can converse with great writers of the past and present. His contemporary myth-making or constructs of the human experience engage metadiscursively with the project of fiction as a philosophical question. Alexie reflects our own world back to us by asserting new aesthetic spaces that invite us to question the power and consequences of defining identity and documenting reality in language. In War Dances, the life-art connections are often scattered or tenuous as fantasy estranges or elements of the absurd seem to skew our expectations.² Strangely enough, many characters clearly resonate with their creator: the writer-narrator who suffered serious childhood illness, the lustful teen out of place, the confused father/son confronting desire and death.

Various themes tie the diverse texts of War Dances together: loss, change, identity, and the past's reach into the present. The fundamental question of War Dances, however, the one that weaves these arguably disjointed pieces into a wonderful cohesive fabric is, Who gets to tell the story? And as a corollary, How do the tales we tell represent or

Telling Identities:

Telling Identities Rosaura Sánchez, 1995 The Californios were the original Spanish speaking settlers of Alta California By the 1870s they had become a conquered and dominated population as a result of the westward expansion of the United States In that same decade the Californios were approached by agents of Hubert Howe Bancroft a wealthy San Francisco book dealer and publisher asking them to narrate recollections of their past in Alta California as part of a research project seeking to assemble all available information and documentation on California history These dictated recollections are known today as testimonios Sánchez offers the first pointed historical and literary analysis of thirty of these testimonios from the 1870s along with additional narratives diaries and documents from the nineteenth century Most of the materials she examines have never before been published and are accessible only in their original handwritten form at the Bancroft Library housed at the University of California at Berkeley Telling Identities scrutinizes the role of gender class race language and ethnicity in group identity formation as it looks into history to help articulate the cultural politics of contemporary Chicano and Latino culture in the United States

Identities in Transition Paige Arthur, 2010-12-13 In many societies histories of exclusion racism and nationalist violence often create divisions so deep that finding a way to deal with the atrocities of the past seems nearly impossible These societies face difficult practical questions about how to devise new state and civil society institutions that will respond to massive or systematic violations of human rights recognize victims and prevent the recurrence of abuse Identities in Transition Challenges for Transitional Justice in Divided Societies brings together a rich group of international researchers and practitioners who for the first time examine transitional justice through an identity lens They tackle ways that transitional justice can act as a means of political learning across communities foster citizenship trust and recognition and break down harmful myths and stereotypes as steps toward meeting the difficult challenges for transitional justice in divided societies

Small Stories, Interaction and Identities Alexandra Georgakopoulou, 2007-08-08 Narrative research is frequently described as a diverse enterprise yet the kinds of narrative data that it bases itself on present a striking consensus they tend to be autobiographical and elicited in interviews This book sets out to carve out a space alongside this narrative canon for stories that have not made it to the mainstream of narrative and identity analysis yet they abound as well as being crucial sites of subjectivity in everyday interactional contexts By labelling those stories as small the book emphasizes their distinctiveness both interactionally and as an antidote to the tradition of grand narratives research Drawing primarily on the audio recorded small stories of a group of female adolescents that was studied ethnographically in a town in Greece the book follows a language focused and practice based approach in order to provide fresh answers and perspectives on some of the perennial questions of narrative analysis How can we re conceptualize the mainstay concepts of tellership structure and evaluation in small stories How do the participants telling identities connect with their larger social identities Finally what does the project of storying self and other mean in small stories and how can it be best explored

The Borders Within Douglas Monroy, 2022-07-19 Throughout its history the nation that is now called the United States has been inextricably entwined with the nation now called Mexico Indeed their indigenous peoples interacted long before borders of any kind were established Today though the border between the two nations is so prominent that it is front page news in both countries Douglas Monroy a noted Mexican American historian has for many years pondered the historical and cultural intertwinings of the two nations Here in beautifully crafted essays he reflects on some of the many ways in which the citizens of the two countries have misunderstood each other Putting himself and his own quest for understanding directly into his work he contemplates the missions of California the differences between liberal and traditional societies the meanings of words like Mexican Chicano and Latino and even the significance of avocados and bathing suits In thought provoking chapters he considers why Native Americans didn t embrace Catholicism why NAFTA isn t working the way it was supposed to and why Mexicans and their neighbors to the north tell themselves different versions of the same historical events In his own thoughtful way Monroy is an explorer Rather than trying to conquer new lands however his goal is to gain new insights He wants to comprehend two cultures that are bound to each other without fully recognizing Theory and Method in Higher Education Research Malcolm Tight, Jeroen Huisman, 2013-10-15 Theory and Method in Higher Education Research contains contemporary contributions to international debates regarding the application and development of theory and methodology in researching higher education Girls in a Goldfish Bowl Rosalyn

George, 2007-01-01 What are the processes of exclusion and inclusion amongst girls friendship groups Can friendship and bullying coexist Is the leader in the class always the most popular member of the class What is the role of the teacher in consolidating group friendships How are culturally diverse friendships negotiated What impact does the process of transition from primary to secondary school have on existing friendship networks Through an exploration of the emotional and social dynamics of young girls friendship groups this book addresses these and other questions which are important in their lives The girls that feature in this book are inner city preadolescent girls as they transfer from their inner city primary school to their secondary schools The schools are all located within an urban context and represent the state and public sector of education The girls encompass the diversity of ethnicities that are found within large urban communities and how they negotiate and manage their friendships across ethnic divisions is a key aspect of this book. By focussing on the constitution of the friendship groups, questions of leadership and popularity, race and ethnicity and bullying are interrogated and their resonance for the exclusionary and inclusionary practices which often characterise friendship groups are examined. This book highlights the emotional investment girls make in their friendships and will support teachers, youth workers and others working within educational contexts in making visible this previously unattended aspect of young girls' lives.

Identity-Trajectories of Early Career Researchers Lynn McAlpine, Cheryl Amundsen, 2017-12-06. The book asks how we can make sense of career paths for PhD graduates, something that has rarely been systematically studied. It offers a coherent synthesis of the empirically based insights that arose from the experiences of 48 early career researchers who were participants in a 10-year qualitative longitudinal research program. The book has the power to inform other researchers' conceptual and methodological approaches to the study of post-PhD career trajectories. The authors draw on the conceptual lens of identity trajectory which emerged from their research program to examine the decision-making processes underpinning the careers of PhD graduates, whether contingent researchers and teachers' assistant professors within the academy or professionals elsewhere. The book highlights the role of personal agency in negotiating academic and non-academic work and careers within broader personal lives. It will be compelling reading for researchers and students working in the areas of Education and Sociology, particularly those with an interest in examining career development and decision-making.

Constructing Race and Ethnicity in America Dvora Yanow, 2015-02-18. What do we mean in the U.S. today when we use the terms race and ethnicity? What do we mean and what do we understand when we use the five standard race/ethnic categories: White, Black, Asian, Native American, and Hispanic? Most federal and state data collection agencies use these terms without explicit attention and thereby create categories of American ethnicity for political purposes. Dvora Yanow argues that race and ethnicity are socially constructed concepts, not objective scientifically grounded variables, and do not accurately represent the real world. She joins the growing critique of the unreflective use of race and ethnicity in American policymaking through an exploration of how these terms are used in everyday practices. Her book is filled with current examples and analyses from a wealth of social institutions: health care, education, criminal justice, and government at all levels. The questions she raises for society and public policy are endless. Yanow maintains that these issues must be addressed explicitly, publicly, and nationally if we are to make our policy and administrative institutions operate more effectively.
