Wankel, Patrick Blessinger, 2013-01-30 Mobile technologies are reshaping and reframing the practice of teaching and learning in higher education This volume critically examines new research on how mobile technologies and m learning technologies like Skype are being used in higher education to increase learner engagement in an era of increasing globalization and mobility Using Emerging Technologies to Enhance Student Engagement , 2008 Today s college students have never known a time when personal computers did not exist They attended K 12 schools where most of their classrooms were equipped with computers Information technology has always been part of their learning process not to mention the impact it has had on the development of their friendships research and writing skills shopping and choice of college or university to attend They expect that institutions of higher education will respond to their inquiries without delay much in the same way that customer service is handled on the Web Student expectations are driving the creation of live Web chats in house social networking sites university wiki and shared virtual spaces Unfortunately higher education faculty and staff in general and student affairs professionals in particular are behind the curve in their use of information technology from back cover The Impact of Information Technology in Student Affairs and Services Bruce Belbin, 2000 Digital Technologies in Higher Education Sarah Guri-Rozenblit, 2009

Technology affects nowadays practically most activities in our life The new digital technologies have permeated economy markets politics our workplaces the ways we communicate with each other our home activities as well as operation of all levels of education from kindergarten to doctoral studies The impact of the new technologies has changed the speed of production and distribution of knowledge as evidenced by the increased publications of scientific papers and the number of patent applications The new technologies challenge higher education institutions world wide to redefine their student constituencies their partners and competitors and to redesign their research infrastructures and teaching practices The digital technologies have also generated many conflicting claims and predictions as to the present and mainly future effects that Internet and World Wide Web might have on higher education environments Some futurists tell us that the information and communication technologies have already produced an era of a digital tsunami and are driving the restructuring of academe by forcing educators to realign and redesign their academic work dramatically while many others contend that the use of technology has remained and will remain on the margins of the academic activities and is unlikely to change in any fundamental way the dominant campus cultures. On one hand the emergence of the new technologies has broadened access to many new student clienteles and in such a way contributed greatly to social equity in higher education and on the other hand the continuous development of advanced and complex technological infrastructures widens the digital divide between developed and developing countries and between rich and poor. Most academics have adopted eagerly the many technological capabilities provided by the Internet in their research activities and at the same time many professors still feel reluctant to incorporate the technologies in their teaching. The digital technologies gave rise to many new providers of higher education and increased the competition in the academic global market and at the same time we witness a growing trend of collaborations and convergence of academic practices enhanced by the new media. The World Wide Web encouraged digital piracy and led to the enactment of stringent copyright and other intellectual property laws while concurrently has enhanced an open source movement that advocates the opening up of academic work and research to the public.

Advancing Higher Education with Mobile Learning Technologies: Cases, Trends, and Inquiry-Based Methods Keengwe, Jared, Maxfield, Marian B., 2014-07-31. This book examines the implementation and success of mobile digital learning tools with the inclusion of data on specific learning environments enhanced by ubiquitous educational technologies. Online and Engaged Stephanie Smith Budhai, 2020-03. Nearly a third of all college students are enrolled in at least one online course and that number continues to grow. Meeting students where they are means bringing student services and supports to online learners by creating innovative ways to carry out traditional student affairs functions. This book shares best practices case studies examples experiences and ideas for supporting online learners through their college experience. The first section focuses on preparing for the everchanging higher education landscape and situating student affairs in the 21st century. The authors address how to support learners taking hybrid and fully online courses within virtual learning environments and how to educate and support 21st century students. The second section focuses on the paradigm shift needed to bring traditional student affairs work to the online environment. The authors address how individual functional areas within student affairs can provide services and supports to students who take their courses 100% online and to traditional on campus students who take online courses. The third and final section explores leveraging technology to advance the work of student affairs for online learners. Tools discussed include learning management systems virtual conferencing systems online integrative cocurricular programming digital badging and virtual learning communities.

The Use of Computers in Student Affairs Steven L. Stelter, 1980. Managing Technology in Higher Education A. W. (Tony) Bates, Albert Sangra, 2011-05-31. Universities continue to struggle in their efforts to fully integrate information and communications technology within their activities Based on examination of current practices in technology integration at 25 universities worldwide this book argues for a radical approach to the management of technology in higher education It offers recommendations for improving governance strategic planning integration of administrative and teaching services management of digital resources and training of technology managers and administrators The book is written for anyone wanting to ensure technology is integrated as effectively and efficiently as possible Increasing Student Engagement and Retention Using Classroom Technologies Charles Wankel, Patrick Blessinger, 2013-02-15 Classroom mediated discourse technologies are reshaping and reframing the practice of teaching and learning in higher education This volume critically examines new research on how classroom mediation technologies like Learning Catalytics are being used in higher education to increase learner engagement and social leaning in the classroom
