Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we can respond to taste or olfaction, thereby using smell and taste to guide our behavior, depends on the number of receptors that respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and in the air (smell). The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular odors. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the sense of touch, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

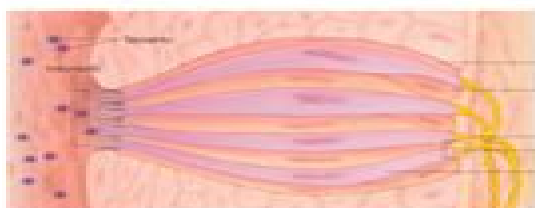

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of substances in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, bitter, sour and salty receptors may taste pleasant.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, have three types of chemoreception called gustatory cells. These taste buds have three receptor cells: salty, bitter and sour. A fifth taste, glutamate or umami, has been reported. This flavor is associated with sweetness, as its signal flows to sweet buds.

The taste bud

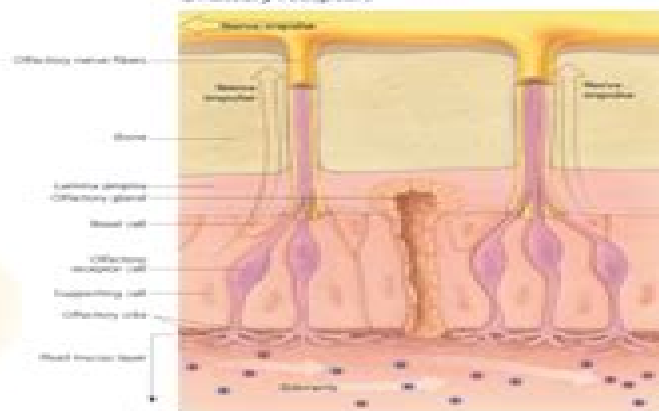

Umami, substances that produce taste, bind to receptor molecules on the surface of the gustatory cell. The resulting receptor potential travels to the basal end of the gustatory cell, where the gustatory cell is chemically connected to the gustatory cell by molecular receptors. Gustatory cells live about 10 days, after which they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or olfactory receptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

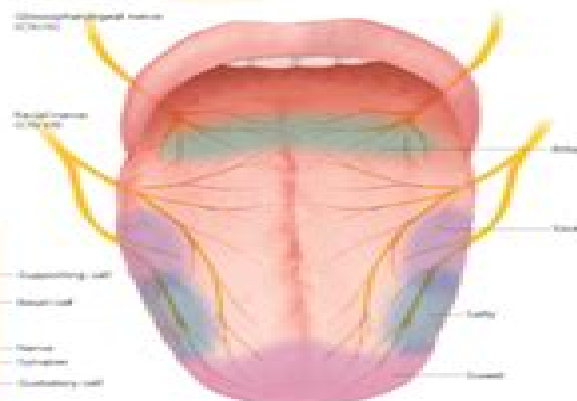

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorous molecules into contact with the olfactory neurons. Binding increases the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

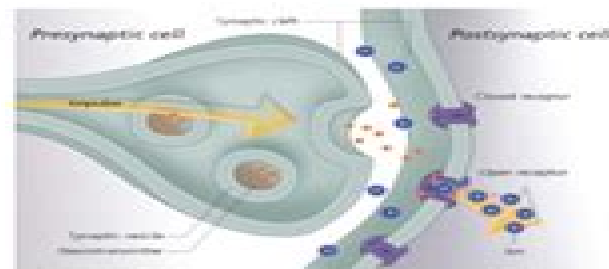

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors in the olfactory epithelium are produced by the olfactory gland, then travel to receptor molecules on the olfactory cilia. The receptor potential that is generated travels along the axon to the olfactory bulb, where it meets the input to the higher brain centers. Unlike other senses, the olfactory neurons are connected directly to the cerebral cortex, rather than through the thalamus in the cerebrum.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more receptors to taste compounds, and about 1,000 taste buds are present in each mouth. The taste buds are located in the taste buds, where they can taste the sweet and salty tastes. The taste buds are located in the taste buds, where they can taste the sweet and salty tastes. The taste buds are located in the taste buds, where they can taste the sweet and salty tastes.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic cell, an axon, and the postsynaptic cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the axon hillock where "trigger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell. The impulse enters the cell, where it enters the cell, where it enters the cell, where it enters the cell.

Taste and Smell Doug Kincaid, Peter Sephton Coles, 1983 Introduces the senses of taste and smell and explains how some things are good to taste while others are not and how smells can tell us about things and warn us of danger Head and Neck Enrico Marani, Ciska Heida, 2018-11-02 This book offers a critical review of the head and neck from an anatomical physiological and clinical perspective It begins by providing essential anatomical and physiological information then discusses historical and current views on specific aspects in subsequent chapters For example the anatomy of the skull cap or cranial vault provided in the first chapter is discussed in the context of malformation and identity as well as the development of the bony skull in the following chapters These chapters provide stepping stones to guide readers through the book There are new fields of research and technological developments in which Anatomy and Physiology lose track of progress One of the examples discussed is the automated face recognition In some respects e.g. when it comes to cancers and malformations our understanding of the head and neck and the resulting therapeutic outcomes have been extremely disappointing In others such as injuries following car accidents there have been significant advances in our understanding of head and neck dysfunctions and their treatment Therefore head movements also during sleep and head and neck reflexes are discussed The book makes unequivocal distinctions between correct and incorrect assumptions and provides a critical review of alternative clinical methods for head and neck dysfunctions such as physiotherapy and lymphatic drainage for cancers Moreover it discusses the consequences of various therapeutic measures for physiological and biomechanical conditions as well as puberty and aging Lastly it addresses important biomedical engineering developments for hearing e g cochlear implants and for applying vestibular cerebellar effects for vision
