Europe and Iran Shannon N. Kile, 2005 The recent controversy over Iran s nuclear programme represents an early and important test for a distinctively European approach to addressing concerns about suspected programmes for the development of weapons of mass destruction Against this background the report brings together European and Iranian perspectives on a range of security and proliferation related issues that have a bearing on diplomatic efforts to resolve the controversy The contributors describe the discussions under way between Europe Iran and the International Atomic Energy Agency aimed at clarifying the scope and nature of Iran's nuclear activities. They examine the development of the European Union's strategy to combat the spread of WMD, Iran's evolving security and defence structures and policies including Iranian thinking about deterrence based defence strategies and the requirements for credibly implementing them and the internal dynamics of security policy decision making in Iran. The report highlights some of the problems and possibilities inherent in the EU's efforts to implement a more targeted multifunctional strategy to prevent WMD proliferation.

Military Engagement Dennis C. Blair, 2013-06-28. The response of an autocratic nation's armed forces is crucial to the outcome of democratization movements throughout the world. But what exact internal conditions have led to real world democratic transitions and have external forces helped or hurt? Here experts with military and policy backgrounds, some of whom have played a role in democratic transitions, present instructive case studies of democratic movements. Focusing on the specific domestic context and the many influences that have contributed to successful transitions, the authors write about democratic civil military relations in fourteen countries and five world regions. The cases include Argentina, Chile, El Salvador, Egypt, Hungary, Indonesia, Lebanon, Nigeria, Philippines, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Syria, and Thailand, augmented by regional overviews of Asia, Europe, Latin America, North Africa, and the Middle East, and sub-Saharan Africa. European Union Law and Defence Integration Martin Trybus, 2005-10-05. This monograph examines the legal dimension of European defence integration from the Second World War to the Treaty Establishing a Constitution for Europe. It covers the evolution of European defence and security law in its legal, historical, and political context. The notion of defence law describes the entire field of rules created to regulate the defence of a nation or alliance. The analysis leads from the earliest mutual defence treaties to the failure of the European Defence Community and the eventual separation of defence from the mainstream of European integration in the 1950s, further to the re-vitalisation of a European security policy in the Treaties of Maastricht, Amsterdam, and Nice. In the context of this evolutionary process, the book examines the function of Community Law as an instrument of European defence integration Community law affects the economic and social aspects of the defence within the limits of the security exemptions of the EC Treaty It has an impact on the composition of the armed forces the procurement of armaments or the regulation of the defence industries The book concludes with an analysis of the Common Security and Defence Policy of the Constitutional Treaty agreed by the European Council in 2004 The discussion shows that European defence integration is characterised by fragmentation in an area where coherence is particularly important First defence and security are addressed in several organisations the EU the Western European Union NATO the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Organisation for Joint Armaments Cooperation Second defence and security are addressed in both the supranational Community Pillar and the intergovernmental Second Pillar of the Treaty on European Union The new Constitutional Treaty aims to overcome the three Pillar structure of the Union Nevertheless it leaves the intergovernmental character of the security and defence policy intact and introduces flexible frameworks for its mutual defence crisis management and armaments components However the Union needs a coherent defence policy to ensure her security and to speak with one voice on the international scene
