Seed Juniper can be found in the southwestern United States in Texas New Mexico and Arizona It has a wide variety of elevation tolerances ranging from 3 000 feet to the ponderosa pine forests at around 7 500 feet Johnsen 1962 It can be characterized by the purple berries that shrivel when dried and is very important for providing food during the winter months for birds that rely on fruits Johnsen 1962 Martin 1951 Poddar and Lederer 1982 It is also noted that One Seed Juniper berries are very palatable to birds because of the sweet taste and can provide a lot of energy due to its high calories Salomonson 1978 The remaining berries that were found were from Russian Olive trees Elaeagnus angustifolia and weighed 9 6 8 3% of collected material Russian Olive trees originated from Europe and Asia but have been found in North America prior to 1900 Borell 1976 At one point the Russian Olive tree was being planted for land management purposes to help in soil conservation improvement of habitat windbreaks and also it was planted in residential areas Borrel 1951 Knopf and Olson 1984 Russian Olives are found in large numbers in Albuquerque as well as in the Rio Grande Valley area The fruit grows in the early fall and stays on the tree through the winter Thus the berries are available to wildlife when other food is in short supply in the winter months Borrell 1951 Although Russian olive may provide a plentiful source of edible fruits it has been found that bird species richness is higher in riparian areas dominated by native vegetation and not the exotic Russian olive Knopf and Olson 1984 Despite this fact Borrel 1951 author of Russian Olive as a Wildlife Food observed Mountain Bluebirds feeding on Russian olive trees Also Russian olive was used by over one third of the bird species in the Gila Valley area of New Mexico as a nesting site perhaps due to increased protection as a nesting site due to spines and a thicket forming growth pattern Stoleson and Finch 2001 However despite these possible benefits it has been estimated that 31% of native bird species that depend on native trees for nesting and insects would be harmed by colonization by Russian olive Shafroth et al 1995 An increase fruits available for passerines in the winter in New Mexico may allow for resident populations to remain if temperatures in the Southwest increase in the future
