

The Teens, Crime, and Community Project in the US

Topic: Law | Words: 945 | Pages: 4

The criminal justice system collaborates with different agencies in order to tackle the major issues affecting the United States. The targeted project topic focuses on the problem of juvenile delinquency. Studies indicate that more youths and children commit different forms of crime in the United States. Such crimes continue to affect the lives of the offenders and their respective families (Christle, Nelson, & Jolivette, 2014). The country's criminal justice system has considered a number of policies and programs in an attempt to deal with juvenile offending. In 2007, the organization liaised with the National Crime Prevention Council (NCPC) to design a powerful program aimed at addressing this problem. The name of the program is Teens, Crime, and the Community (TCC).

The purpose of this program has been to encourage more youths to create safer neighborhoods and learning institutions (Gorgen, Evenepoel, Kraus, & Taefi, 2015). The NCPC collaborates with different social workers and community volunteers to implement the program. Teens are educated about the dangers of crime and how it affects the welfare of many people in the society. The program encourages teenagers in different parts of the nation to support new measures that can tackle the problem of crime (Saminsky, 2010). The program has continued to target many youths in different learning institutions. Experts believe that the project will play a significant role towards reducing the number of juvenile offenses in the country.
