The Opec Natural Gas Dilemma Westview Special Studies In International Economics And Business:

The Opec Natural Gas Dilemma Bijan Mossavar-rahmani, Sharmin B Mossavar-Rahmani, 2019-06-26 The OPEC countries possess an estimated one third of total world natural gas reserves but they produce relatively small volumes of this clean convenient and flexible fuel and much of what is produced is flared and wasted for lack of demand Historically the major barrier to full utilization of OPEC s natural gas potential has been the high cost of gathering processing and transporting natural gas relative to cheap and easily available crude oil Now higher prices make a stepped up international gas trade economically viable for the first time but a host of formidable geopolitical financial risk sharing environmental and other barriers remain to be resolved This volume a primer on natural gas and international natural gas trade also provides an inside view of how the OPEC countries view their options with respect to the medium and long term development of this important source of domestic energy and export earnings The authors discuss the trade prospects and problems facing the OPEC nations examine OPEC efforts to formulate a uniform price and export policy and explore potential patterns of cooperation between exporters and importers The authors also include current statistics on global natural gas supply and demand balances as well as information on OPEC domestic natural gas projects and export contracts both existing and planned
