The ten commandments of theatre etiquette

Words to live by when you're watching the show

BY JACQUELINE

The following ten commandments of theatre etiquette were his program. First, I must admit that as an actor and director of plays, musicals and operas I just had to get this off my chest. There I just wrote better. The second program is education. I hereby give permission to anyone in attendance and to print these commandments and to spread them far and wide. May I suggest you print these in your program? If that's not an option, perhaps you can hand out copies to your students at the end of a show. Also, or before they're heading out to see a show. One way or the other, maybe we can educate a few people and make the theatre a more pleasant experience for everyone.

1. Thou shalt not talk.

This is the first and the greatest commandment. Please note that this commandment does not say, "Thou shalt not talk loudly," or "Thou shalt not talk excessively," or "Thou shalt not talk about subjects other than the performance in progress," or anything else. No, the commandment is quite categorical. Thou shalt not talk at all. There are two reasons for this commandment, both as obvious that experienced theatergoers are in danger of becoming impatient with the theater-going equivalent of road rage when they encounter it. Reason one: Talking in theaters is an epidemic, apparently lots of people don't get it.

Reason two: Reason number one. No matter what you do, no matter how hard you try, no matter how quiet you think you are, it is simply impossible—yes, impossible—to talk in a theater without disturbing people around you. And please note that talking is also sneezing, coughing, and shuffling in the wrong way. No, you are not an exception. And no, the play or movie or musical does not improve with your sneezing, coughing or your friend. And no, there is no question you feel compelled to ask that justifies sneezing, coughing or shuffling.

Reason number two. No matter how clever you think you are at multitasking, it cannot be overstated the fact that if you are talking, then you are not completely listening. Theatergoers are allowed, included. But when the headlights go down, that means the only people in the theater should be watching from the stage. There is the time for talking. Talking in the theater is: 1. stupid and 2. rude.

2. Thou shalt turn off and put away all cell phones and beepers.

This is the second commandment and it is the first. Cell phones and beepers going off disturb and annoy itself, if the truth be told, nobody really disturbs or annoys as well as the performers on stage. There are no exceptions. If you are a theater-watching kind of a theater-going person or a program patient or even other theatergoers, you can tell your beeper to silence or you can leave your phone with the house manager or you can stay home and give up the theater for the evening. You must know that your needs are more important than the hundreds of other people who have come to the theater and have a right to expect a cell phone-free show.

Please note that the commandment says "turn off and put away." Does it the second is directed to the phone, the bright light of a cell phone in a darkened theater can be seen throughout the house and disturb everyone. Furthermore, it is extremely disrespectful to be seen holding and reading your cell phone, or even to off and put away.

And yet, don't bring it into the theater at all. If there is an absolute prohibition against using the thing, why have it?
