Sutton Hoo and Its Landscape Tom Williamson, 2008 The location of the Anglo Saxon burial ground at Sutton Hoo on a ridge overlooking the estuary of the river Deben has always appeared strange and challenging. This is not so much because the site is today an isolated and lonely one but rather because it lies on the very periphery of the early medieval kingdom of East Anglia whose rulers the Wuffingas were buried there. In this extended meditation on the geography of a very special and evocative place Tom Williamson explores the meaning of the cemetery's location. To understand the location of ancient monuments we need to examine not only the character of past landscapes but also the ways that contemporaries may have experienced and felt about them; we need to reconstruct aspects of their mental world. Williamson argues that the cemetery was placed where it was not in order to display power and dominance over territory but because the river and its brooding estuary had long held a special and central place in the lives and perceptions of a local society. As King Raedwald and his family rose to dominance over this river people they chose to be buried at the heart of their territory. Such approaches may help us to understand why the cemetery was established where it was within the territory of the Wuffingas but they cannot explain why that group came to dominate the whole of East Anglia. For this Williamson argues we need to examine wider geographical contexts: patterns of movement, contact and social allegiance which were engendered and shaped by landforms and topography at a regional and national level. It is only by joining aspects of the new phenomenological approaches to the archaeology of landscape to more traditional geographical interpretations that we can appreciate the full significance of this important site. Combining a keen understanding of local and regional geography, Anglo Saxon history and current debates about approaches to past landscapes, this book is a masterly exploration of the context and meaning of an iconic set of monuments.

East Anglia and Its North Sea World in the Middle Ages David Bates, Robert Liddiard, 2015. This collection of essays discusses East Anglia in the context of a medieval maritime framework and explores the extent to which there was a distinctive community bound together by the shared frontier of the North Sea during the Middle Ages. It brings together the work of a range of international scholars and includes contributions from the disciplines of history, archaeology, art history and literary studies.

Social Identity in Early Medieval Britain William O. Frazer, Andrew Tyrell, 2001-01-01. Social identity is a concept of increasing importance in the social sciences. Here the concept is applied to the often atheoretical realm of medieval studies. Each contributor focuses on a particular topic of early medieval identity: ethnicity, national identity, social location, subjectivity, personhood, political organization, kinship, the body gender age proximity regionality memory and ideological systems The result is a pioneering vision of medieval social identity and a challenge to some of the received general wisdoms about this period
