➔ Systemic arterial hypertension is characterized by persistent high blood pressure (BP) in the arteries. Most affected individuals have primary hypertension, which is caused by multifactorial gene-environment interactions. Hypertension can also be the result of another condition (secondary hypertension) or a monogenic inherited disease.

DIAGNOSIS

Hypertension is generally asymptomatic and many affected people are unaware that they have it. All adults should have their BP measured regularly by their health care provider. Out-of-office methods to measure BP can uncover white coat hypertension (in which BP is elevated at the doctor's office but otherwise normal) and masked hypertension (in which BP is normal at the doctor's office but elevated otherwise). Accurate BP measurement is necessary to diagnose hypertension, and assessment of a patient's BP-related cardiovascular disease (CVD) risk and comorbid conditions (including stroke, coronary artery disease, heart failure and peripheral vascular disease), as well as BP per se, is needed to guide management.

! Monogenic forms of hypertension are rare. Genome-wide association studies have identified >120 loci that are associated with BP regulation.

EPIDEMIOLOGY

Global, one in five individuals is estimated to have hypertension. High systolic BP is the greatest single risk factor contributing to the global burden of disease and to global all-cause mortality. Hypertension is associated with increased risk of CVD and renal disease.

RISK

OUTLOOK

Overall, the prevalence of hypertension and the hypertension-associated global burden are increasing, particularly in low-income and middle-income countries. This increase is partly due to global population growth and ageing,

To reduce the burden, public health policy should encourage healthy diets and lifestyles and routine BP monitoring.

Safe and effective antihypertensive drugs are available for treatment of patients whose BP cannot be controlled with lifestyle changes alone, particularly those with high CVD risk and comorbidities.

PHYSICAL ACTIVITY

Lifestyle changes aiming at reducing BP are recommended for all individuals with hypertension.

REDUCED
POSSIBILITIES

MECHANISMS

Physiological BP levels are maintained through a complex interplay of various components of an integrated neurohumoral system including the renin-angiotensin-aldosterone system (RAAS). Disruption of factors involved in BP control in any of these systems can directly or indirectly lead to hypertension.

PREVENTION

The association between BP and CVD risk highlights the importance of prevention. The same lifestyle changes that are recommended for the management of hypertension are effective as preventive strategies.

QUALITY OF LIFE

Being diagnosed with hypertension can be associated with worsening of health-related quality of life. While antihypertensive drugs are generally well tolerated, treatment-related reductions in BP can have a negative effect on elderly and frail patients who are at high risk of hypotension, which could lead to falls, dizziness and cognitive impairment.

Arterial and Venous Systems in Essential Hypertension

Michel Emile Safar, 2012-12-06 The hemodynamic mechanisms of hypertension are often limited to the study of three dominant parameters blood pressure cardiac output and vascular resistance Accordingly the development of hypertension is usually analyzed in terms of a struggle between cardiac output and vascular resistance resulting in the classical pattern of normal cardiac output and increased vascular resistance thus indicating a reduction in the caliber of small arteries However during the past years the clinical management of hypertension has largely modified these simple views While an adequate control of blood pressure may be obtained with antihypertensive drugs arterial complications may occur involving mainly the coronary circulation and suggesting that several parts of the cardiovascular system are altered in hypertension Indeed disturbances in the arterial and the venous system had already been noticed in animal hypertension The basic assumption in this book is that the overall cardiovascular system is involved in the mechanisms of the elevated blood pressure in patients with hypertension not only the heart and small arteries but also the large arteries and the venous system For that reason the following points are emphasized First the cardiovascular system in hypertension must be studied not only in terms of steady flow but also by taking into account the pulsatile components of the heart and the arterial systems Second arterial and venous compliances are altered in hypertension and probably reflect intrinsic alterations of the vascular wall
