Cochrane,1838 Demoniality: Incubi and Succubi The Rev. Father Sinistrari of Ameno,2020-09-28 The first author who to my knowledge invented the word Demoniality is John Caramuel in his Fundamental Theology and before him I find no one who distinguished that crime from Bestiality Indeed all Theological Moralists following in the train of S Thomas 2 2 question 154 include under the specific title of Bestiality every kind of carnal intercourse with any thing whatever of a different species such are the very words used by S Thomas Cajetan for instance in his commentary on that question classes intercourse with the Demon under the description of Bestiality so does Sylvester de Luxuria Bonacina de Matrimonio question 4 and others However it is clear that in the above passage S Thomas did not at all allude to intercourse with the Demon As shall be demonstrated further on that intercourse cannot be included in the very particular species of Bestiality and in order to make that sentence of the holy Doctor tally with truth it must be admitted that when saying of the unnatural sin that committed through intercourse with a thing of different species it takes the name of Bestiality S Thomas by a thing of different species means a living animal of another species than man for he could not here use the word thing in its most general sense to mean indiscriminately an animate or inanimate being In fact if a man should fornicate cum cadavere humano he would have to do with a thing of a species quite different from his own especially according to the Thomists who deny the form of human corporeity in a corpse similarly si cadaveri bestiali copularetur and yet talis coitus would not be bestiality but pollution What therefore S Thomas intended here to specify with preciseness is carnal intercourse with a living thing of a species different from man that is to say with a beast and he never in the least thought of intercourse with the Demon
