Biological Amplification Systems in Immunology N. Day,2013-11-11 Interest in complement developed at the end of the nineteenth century from observations on cellular and humoral defense mechanisms against bacteria It was recognized at that time that there were factors in body fluids of animals and man that were capable of killing and lysing bacteria in the absence of cellular factors Due to the efforts of two of the founders of immunology Bordet and Ehrlich and their colleagues by 1912 the multicomponent nature of complement action was well recognized the sequence of reaction of the components in the lysis of erythrocytes was defined complement fixation as a major tool for studying antibody antigen interaction was well established and studies on the physicochemical properties of the components had been started Yet with a few notable exceptions research on complement was largely abandoned by most mainstream immunologists for the following two or three decades When one looks at the contents of the present volume it is hard to imagine that as recently as 20 years ago there were probably fewer than ten major laboratories where complement research was the primary theme The contents attest to the fact that there are today dozens of laboratories on three continents where research on complement is pursued in depth It is not easy to point to all the advances that have occurred in complement research during the past few years Immunology of Human Infection André J. Nahmias,Richard J. O'Reilly,2013-11-09 When we were first approached by the senior editors of this series to edit a book on interactions between the host and infectious agents we accepted this offer as an exciting challenge The only condition readily agreed upon was that such a book should focus on the immunology of infections in humans Our reasons if not biases were severalfold We sensed that the fields of microbiology and immunology which had diverged as each was focusing on its individual search were coming together In agreement with the opinions expressed by Dr Richard Krause in the Introduction we strongly believed that the development of the immune system evolved in response to infectious agents and that the evolution of these agents was influenced in turn by the character of the host's responses An intensive examination of the multitude of primitive or more recently developed host defense mechanisms to determine their relative contribution to man's resistance to a given infectious agent appeared to us to be of crucial basic and practical interest Many immune mechanisms studied in animals were being explored in humans and it appeared timely to focus particularly on what was known about man's resistance to infectious agents correlating this information with lessons learned from relevant experiments in animal models

The Immunochemistry of Man George Kwapinski, 1991 Presents the antigenic composition of the human body in the states of physical and mental health change due to genetic and environmental influences and in disease and recovery The scientific data in this book is amplified by showing its practical application to medicine and sciences
