The Motivation and Psychological Response of the Injured Athlete in Relationship to Season Success, Perceived Coach Support, Gender, and Concern about the Implications of Being Injured Elizabeth Williams, 2005

The motivation of an athlete to return to play after being injured was measured by a modified Participation Motivation Questionnaire (PMQ). Data were collected from 56 student athletes currently under care for an athletic-related injury at a southern Christian university. Statistical analysis concluded that there was only one significant difference found when comparing season success, perceived coach's support, gender, and concern about the implications of being injured. This significant factor was perceived coach's support.
