

The International Monetary Fund: Reform without Reconstruction?

The attempt at scholarly reform of the international monetary system, which started formally in September 1971, has come to at least a partial close with the resignation by the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) of the National Administrators of the Articles of Agreement. Indeed, the new Board has announced that it has no intention of changing the Committee. In this essay I examine the significance of the various reactions and the reasons for the apparent failure, and reflect on the further development of the system.

An earlier limited reform was embodied in the First Amendment of the IMF's Articles of Agreement, enacted in 1966, was designed to improve monetary policy coordination with the Special Drawing Right (SDR). The underlying purpose was to achieve at least a measure of international financial stability and the growth of international liquidity. The creation of a new permanent reserve asset issued by the IMF was expected to reduce the need for further internationalization of reserve currency holdings, particularly U.S. dollars. The reform would also reduce the need for expansion of gold and international payments adjustment pressure by reducing the need for, and thereby the ability of, the national currencies to compete with the United States to issue dollars. These expectations were not realized. The United States continued to issue large balances of payments deficits, and there led to the suspension of dollar convertibility into gold. This development anticipated the crisis, which the international financial community had increasingly felt for some time as well, that the existing international monetary system was contributing to the dollarization of balance-of-payments adjustment. Hence the decision to attempt scholarly reform.

Under the aegis of the various major international bodies the national groups, and in particular with the Washington group, the system was also concerned with convertibility and the need for helpful suggestions. I am indebted to United States and numerous French and Japanese of the IMF, in particular Charles Kindle, David H. White, Joseph Gold (who suggested the title of this essay), J. J. Pöhl, Robert Loh, and Winston Fung. Numerous key French and Japanese in the Council of the Governors of France, and particularly Bernard Gossy and Robert Redmond, also helped me greatly.
