Sriram, 1999-05-01 A stable money demand forms the cornerstone in formulating and conducting monetary policy Consequently numerous theoretical and empirical studies have been conducted in both industrial and developing countries to evaluate the determinants and the stability of the money demand function This paper briefly reviews the theoretical work tracing the contributions of several researchers beginning from the classical economists and explains relevant empirical issues in modeling and estimating money demand functions Notably it summarizes the salient features of a number of recent studies that applied cointegration error correction models in the 1990s and it features a bibliography to aid in research on demand for money The Agricultural Situation in the Far East and Oceania Amjad H. The book draws on evidence from experiments and hundreds of interviews with policy makers and Chinese investors across Nigeria South Africa Kenya Ethiopia and Tanzania It shows that governments of authoritarian or one party dominant states which are among the top receivers of Chinese investments are able to easily and successfully act collectively to impose human capital and technology transfer requirements The book argues that rather than treating African countries as price takers in the face of increasing Chinese influence in the continent we should instead recognise the significant bargaining leverage that many African governments have to influence deal conditions especially with smaller private Chinese companies It demonstrates that several African governments can instead act as price setters and that the success of the rising Chinese presence in Africa and whether this leads to positive or negative development outcomes fundamentally depends on the development strategies that individual African governments decide on In the context of an often polarised debate the original research presented in this book has important implications for the future economic development strategies of African countries As such it will be of interest to researchers working on Chinese and African investment politics institutions business economics and international relations
