Sustainable Development Changing Product:

Changing Production Patterns, 2002 One of the keys to achieving sustainable development is changing the production patterns that waste resources and emit more pollutants than our ecosystem can absorb. Reviewing case studies and experiences was not enough to implement changes. What was needed was technical and financial assistance to help companies get started. UNEP and UNIDO worked in a proactive partnership to establish the National Cleaner Production Centres with a hope that they would serve as a model to be replicated by other countries. The aim of this publication is to provide some guidelines to those wanting to learn from the experiences positive or negative of the UNIDO UNEP National Cleaner Production Centres so that they can move forward on their own and thus contribute towards changing production patterns in their countries. New to Improve - The Mutual Influence between New Products and Societal Change Processes Jan Pieter Joore, 2010

Product Lifecycle Management (Volume 2) John Stark, 2015-10-30 This second volume moves beyond a general introduction to product lifecycle management PLM and its principal elements to provide a more in depth analysis of the subjects introduced in Volume 1. 21st Century Paradigm for Product Realisation. Providing insights into the emergence of PLM and the opportunities it offers, key concepts such as the PLM Grid and the PLM Paradigm are introduced along with the main components of PLM and the associated characteristics, issues and approaches. Detailing the 10 components of PLM: objectives and metrics, management and organisation, business processes, people, product data, PDM systems, other PLM applications, facilities and equipment, methods and products, it provides examples and best practices. The book concludes with instructions to help readers implement and use PLM successfully, including outlining the phases of a PLM Initiative: development of PLM vision and strategy, documentation of the current situation, description of future scenarios, development of implementation strategies and plans, implementation and use. The main activities, tasks, methods, timing and tools of the different phases are also described.

Global Product John Stark, 2007-08-15 In the early years of the 21st Century, as a result of many changes, it has become possible for the first time for tens of thousands of companies to offer manufactured products to customers across six continents. For many of these global products, there are potentially more than a billion customers. In 2007, Wall Street hit new highs as the enormous opportunity for increased sales and profits became clear. However, the new environment is not easy to manage and the risks are high. Meeting the various requirements of customers from a range of countries, choosing the most suitable locations for the different stages of development and manufacturing, deciding what can be global and what must be local, implementing suitable processes and systems, accommodating different national regulations and efficiently dividing the workload between diverse sites are among the many challenges faced by providers of global products. Product Lifecycle Management is now used worldwide to manage the innovation, development and support of global products. This key new business activity manages a product anywhere in the world at any time in its life, from the first idea through to recycling and disposal. Based on interviews with executives and managers in companies such as ABB Alcatel Lucent Dow Corning and Siemens Global Product outlines the new environment and driving forces and the resulting opportunities and challenges From lessons learned it draws conclusions about best practices and the ground rules for successful strategies structures and implementation In addition the objectives and components of Product Lifecycle Management are highlighted
