

Systemic diseases can affect the nasal airway and paranasal sinuses in both specific and nonspecific ways.

In some cases, the nasal findings may be the first indication of systemic disease.

Nasal manifestations of systemic diseases often present with symptoms of chronic rhinosinusitis that either does not respond or only minimally responds to standard treatments.

Systemic diseases that affect the nasal airway can produce pathologic changes in three general ways.

1—the general pathophysiology of the disease may affect the tissues of the nose, as in recurrent or severe epistaxis secondary to a coagulopathy.

2—the unique mucosal histology of the nose may make an otherwise minor pathologic process more severe and apparent, as seen in hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasia. In this particular disease, telangiectasia causes few symptoms in the skin, but in the superficial, easily traumatized vessels of the nasal mucosa, severe epistaxis may occur

3—a systemic disease may affect the tissues of the nose as part of a symptom complex, as seen in Wegener granulomatosis (WG).
