

BATTLE OF ARGINUSETAE

Athenians won an astounding victory at Arginusae in 406 BCE, but threw it away by vengefully prosecuting its triumphant generals

For a long while, Athens had resisted its hopes for a successful war on Alcibiades, the notorious but undeniably talented general who had led the Athenian fleet to victories at Alcyonae in 411 BCE and Cyzicus in 410 BCE. But a combination of bad luck, Alcibiades' bad temper at Naxos in 408 BCE, and also cost him his job. Dismissed by the Athenians, who sought a scapegoat for the defeat, he was replaced by Conon as fleet commander.

Conon conducted naval raids on Peloponnesian territories, and meanwhile, the Spartans sent out a replacement, however (admittedly) named Callinicus, to take over the Peloponnesian fleet based at Ephesus on the western coast of Asia Minor. The invasion started against the Athenian-allied city of Mytilene, located on the island of Lesbos. Mytilene fell to the Peloponnesian attack, but shortly Conon came up with his fleet of 70 triremes, too late to intervene. So he parked his ships among the Hundred Isles, and by morning the next day, the Peloponnesian fleet, consisting of 140 triremes, arrived on the scene. Conon beat a hasty retreat, thinking that he might lure off a part of the much larger enemy fleet and then pounce on it in the vicinity of the nearby city of Mytilene, which was also on Lesbos.

Conon rowed his ships away slowly, so that the Peloponnesians would give chase. The men rowed, and Conon then ordered his ships to turn around to sail on their own. Despite being caught by surprise, the Peloponnesians fought with such ferocity that they gained themselves enough time for the remainder of their fleet to catch up. Outnumbered, Conon escaped with 40 triremes into Mytilene's harbour. The crews off much of the rest of his fleet were forced to leave their ships and run for safety into Mytilene.

Callinicus next made an attempt to take Mytilene by storm, but Conon blocked this off. It would only be a matter of time before the city fell, however, and so Conon demanded as fast tribute to Athens as long as he said. The Athenians responded by this place by building a fleet of 120 ships in just a month. Desperate for crewmen, they got about 1,000 who were willing to serve, including metics (resident aliens) and helots who were given citizenship in exchange for their services, as well as slaves. The fleet moved out to Conon's rescue, and the time it had reached Mytilene it had been augmented by 40 more ships gathered en route.

In the meantime, Callinicus was continuing his siege of Mytilene, where Conon was still present, and roughly treated a tiny Athenian garrison that had the impudence to show itself in the vicinity. Once the main Athenian fleet arrived, Callinicus took 320 triremes against the anchorage, in the street industry Arginusae Islands, leaving 80 ships to keep up the blockade at Mytilene.

When the Peloponnesian fleet was sighted, the Athenians came out to fight. While they had the edge in overall ship numbers, their crews were less skilled than those of the Peloponnesians, having had no little time in which to train at putting their oars. Well-aware of their disadvantage, the Athenians deployed their war galleys in front of, and to either side of, the 1,000-strong Arginusae Island. The force was split into two lines, one behind the other, in order to stop the Peloponnesians trying the choppy, or breakthrough manoeuvre, in which a formation would move through an enemy line and then turn about to ram the vulnerable sides of ships off their galley, or the Peloponnesians tried this, the rear line Athenian ships would be perfectly placed to ram them.

Callinicus, successful off a pre-battle oration that had foretold his own death, directed
