

How A Bill Becomes A Law

#1

Legislation is handed to the Speaker of the House to be analyzed and approved. The legislation reaches the Speaker through a hopper at the side of the Clerk's desk.

#2

If the Speaker decides to continue the bill on the route, the legislation is assigned to a committee. The Chair of the committee may then direct the bill to a specialized subcommittee as most bills do not need the attention of an entire committee.

#3

The committee might also offer committee hearings for committee members to gather information regarding the proposed bill. Based off of the committee's findings, amendments may be proposed to make the bill look or be better. Riders are additional proposals attached in hopes of slipping by.

#4

It is then taken to a vote in the house. A party whip gauges the likability of the vote to see if it can pass in the first place. There is then the option for floor debate, though very limited in the House, to bring up concerns that can then be smoothed out in the committee.

#5

After the debate is settled, the bill is passed to the Senate. In the Senate, the Senate majority leader can discover whether it is a favorable bill for their party or not. If it is not, cloture can be proposed to quickly end debate and vote if it is decided that this bill will likely die in the Senate.

#6

If there is a chance, it is referred to committees in the Senate for review. The bill will often be marked up before being reported out to the Senate after review. The President of the Senate may then schedule time on the calendar for this bill to be discussed and reviews.

#7

As the Senate has different rules, a filibuster may occur due to those that are discontented with the bill. This is when members of the chamber drag out their speeches for obscene amounts of time in hopes of letting the bill die.

#8

If the bill is voted on in the Senate chamber and passed, it is then referred to a conference committee comprised of representatives from both chambers for final discussion. Then, the President may sign or veto the bill.
