Downton, 2008-11-19 From 2008 for the first time in human history half of the world's population now live in cities Yet despite a wealth of literature on green architecture and planning there is to date no single book which draws together theory from the full range of disciplines from architecture planning and ecology which we must come to grips with if we are to design future cities which are genuinely sustainable Paul Downton's Ecopolis takes a major step along this path It highlights the urgent need to understand the role of cities as both agents of change and means of survival at a time when climate change has finally grabbed world attention and it provides a framework for designing cities that integrates knowledge both academic and practical from a range of relevant disciplines Identifying key theorists practitioners places and philosophies the book provides a solid theoretical context which introduces the concept of urban fractals and goes on to present a series of design and planning tools for achieving Sustainable Human Ecological Development SHED Combining knowledge from diverse fields to present a synthesis of urban ecology the book will provide a valuable resource for students researchers and practitioners in architecture construction planning geography and the traditional life sciences Future Forms and Design For Sustainable Cities Mike Jenks, Nicola Dempsey, 2006-08-11 Concentrating on the planning and design of cities the three sections take a logical route through the discussion from the broad considerations at regional and city scale to the larger city at high and lower densities through to design considerations on the smaller block scale Key design issues such as access to facilities access for sunlight life cycle analyses and the impact of communications on urban design are tackled and in conclusion the research is compared to large scale design examples that have been proposed and or implemented over the past decade to give a vision for the future that might be achievable
