Something In My Mind Besides The Everyday Women And Literacy:

Something in My Mind Besides the Everyday Jennifer Horsman, 1990 This book grew out of a belief that the omission of studies about women and literacy is a crucial mistake If we are to challenge the myths of illiteracy we need studies that start from the standpoint of the women who are labeled illiterate or silent We need to listen to women s accounts of their own lives I m even feeling better just learning having something else in my mind besides the everyday Judy I think it s probably pretty strange to anyone that doesn t realize the kind of a life that a battered woman lives I made it my little mini war trying to win battle after battle to get my own little place my own little piece of myself I want to work I want to work at something that I can enjoy getting up in the morning where I think I m accomplishing something where I can get paid a reasonable amount to live on I m asking for the moon and the stars and everything else Alice Women and Literacy Susan Imel, 1996 communication The contributors come from diverse backgrounds they include students and teachers in adult basic education higher education and schools others are community publishers and researchers several of whom are internationally known They share a commitment to plain accessible language The book is extensively illustrated and sign posted to enable readers to move easily between case studies and themes This makes it a book to dip into which can also be enjoyed by anyone concerned with the role of written communication in education and society as a whole The themes that are dealt with include different voices literacy and identity the role of literacy in making choices and change collaborative writing and creating new forms of written expression gender and literacy bilingual literacy spoken and written language children and adult learners public and private uses of literacy and bureaucratic literacy Talking Appalachian Amy D. Local Literacies David

Barton, Mary Hamilton, 2012-03-12 Local Literacies is a unique detailed study of the role of reading and writing in people's everyday lives. By concentrating on a selection of people in a particular community in Lancaster, England, the authors analyse how they use literacy in their day-to-day lives. It follows four people in detail, examining how they use local media, their participation in public life, the role of literacy in family activities and in leisure pursuits. Links are made between everyday learning and education. The study is based on an ethnographic approach to studying everyday activities and is framed in the theory of literacy as a social practice. This Routledge Linguistics Classic includes a new foreword by Deborah Brandt and a new framing chapter in which David Barton and Mary Hamilton look at the connections between local and global activities, interfaces with institutional literacies and the growing significance of digital literacies in everyday life. A seminal text, Local Literacies provides an explicit, usable methodology for both teachers and researchers and clear theorising around a set of six propositions. Clearly written and engaging, this is a deeply absorbing study and is essential reading for all those involved in literacy and literacy education.

Managing to Care Ann E. P. Dill, The point of departure for Managing to Care is widespread concern that the present delivery of health and social welfare services is fragmented, uncoordinated, inefficient, costly, wasteful and ultimately detrimental to clients' health and wellbeing. Dill traces the evolution of case management from its start as a tool for integrating services on the level of the individual client to its current role as a force behind the most significant trends in health care. Those trends include the entrenchment of bureaucracy, the challenges of once dominant professions and the rise of corporate control. The author's purpose in adopting this analysis is to invite further scrutiny of the case management profession and at the same time to identify new possibilities for its application. This volume brings together thoughts developed over many years of observing and participating in case management programs. It provides a multilayered perspective of case management, showing linkages among its social and historical contexts and the ways it is practiced today in diverse service settings. The author emerged convinced about the essential need for care coordination and that present ways of providing care can work against our highest objectives in doing so. The paradoxes and contraindications embedded in case management practice became a major theme of the book. Managing to Care is highly critical of the ways case management has come to absorb and reflect the organizational flaws of the very service systems it was intended to reform. Too often, management of the case comes to dominate care. The author does not call for a rejection of professional systems in favor of a resurrected informal community. While much can and should be done to strengthen our ties to one another, there will always be people whose problems require more expert help. Dill argues here that case management can provide such help and provide it well, but only if it is grounded in the human dimension of a caring relationship. Ann E. P. Dill, associate professor of sociology and gender studies at Brown University, is a medical sociologist and social gerontologist. Her research examines issues affecting the long-term provision of health care and social services both in the United States and in countries formerly part of Yugoslavia.
