The Story of the Malakand Field Force Winston Churchill, 2013-09-18 On general grounds I deprecate prefaces I have always thought that if an author cannot make friends with the reader and explain his objects in two or three hundred pages he is not likely to do so in fifty lines And yet the temptation of speaking a few words behind the scenes as it were is so strong that few writers are able to resist it I shall not try While I was attached to the Malakand Field Force I wrote a series of letters for the London Daily Telegraph The favourable manner in which these letters were received encouraged me to attempt a more substantial work This volume is the result The original letters have been broken up and I have freely availed myself of all passages phrases and facts that seemed appropriate The views they contained have not been altered though several opinions and expressions which seemed mild in the invigorating atmosphere of a camp have been modified to suit the more temperate climate of peace I have to thank many gallant officers for the assistance they have given me in the collection of material They have all asked me not to mention their names but to accede to this request would be to rob the story of the Malakand Field Force of all its bravest deeds and finest characters
