

MAKING THE CONNECTIONS: SYSTEMS THINKING

Often, we only see one piece of the puzzle.
To solve it, we need to have an understanding of the picture as a whole.

WHAT IS "SYSTEMS THINKING"?

A System is a set of interacting and interdependent elements that function as a whole, whether in the social organization or in an entire society.

Systems thinking requires that in order to understand and change a situation the system as a whole, not just a portion, the system, is considered, and systems interdependency, we need to see beyond the detail of individual parts to the system as a whole.

Systems thinking is a way of viewing and understanding complex problems holistically, and provides an alternative to both an oversimplified, rigid, and narrow (single perspective).

Using a set of tools that can help us understand and address complex problems

WHAT IS THE WELLESLEY URBAN HEALTH MODEL?

The Wellesley Institute, in partnership with the Caisse Foundation, has developed a systems thinking approach to the social determinants of health and developed a model for the City of Toronto.

The Wellesley Urban Health Model provides a way to see the health of Toronto as a system, by looking at different social determinants of health. It includes social, economic, cultural, and environmental factors, and recognizes that these factors are interconnected and influence each other. The model provides a framework for understanding the social determinants of health, and for developing strategies to improve them.

HOW DOES IT WORK?

The model allows you to identify different components and a relationship of all parts, and understand the impact of policy decisions on public health outcomes and on chronic diseases, disability and death. The model has the ability to make action in the area:

- Improve engagement between sectors
- Build coalitions between community organizations
- Identify gaps and develop strategies to fill them
- Identify barriers to achieving community health goals

The model allows you to see the broader and deeper impacts of the actions you take, and understand the impact of policy decisions on public health outcomes and on chronic diseases, disability and death. The model has the ability to make action in the area:

HOW CAN IT BE USED?

The Wellesley Institute's goal is to provide a tool that will allow us to see the social determinants of health, and understand the impact of policy decisions on public health outcomes and on chronic diseases, disability and death. The model can be used to:

- Identify gaps in understanding the social determinants of health
- Build coalitions between sectors
- Identify barriers to achieving community health goals
- Identify gaps in understanding the social determinants of health
