Modernism, Ireland and the Erotics of Memory Nicholas Andrew Miller, 2002-09-19 In Modernism Ireland and the Erotics of Memory Nicholas Miller re-examines memory and its role in modern Irish culture. Arguing that a continuous renegotiation of memory is characteristic of Irish modernist writing, Miller investigates a series of case studies in modern Irish historical imagination. He reassesses Ireland's self-construction through external or foreign discourses such as the cinema and proposes readings of Yeats and Joyce as counter-memorialists. Combining theoretical and historical approaches, Miller shows how the modernist handling of history transforms both memory and the story of the past by highlighting readers' investments in histories that are produced specifically and concretely through local acts of reading. This original study will attract scholars of Modernism, Irish studies, film and literary theory.

Ireland and Cinema Barry Monahan, 2015-08-25 The volume offers a broad range of academic approaches to contemporary and historical Irish filmmaking and representations of nationality, national identity and theoretical questions around the construction of Ireland and Irishness on the screen.

Magic Lantern, Panorama and Moving Picture Shows in Ireland, 1786-1909 Kevin Rockett, Emer Rockett, 2011 This book is the first volume in a two-volume set on the history of cinema in Ireland from the 18th century to the present day; the second companion volume is titled Film Exhibition and Distribution in Ireland 1909-2010. What the book demonstrates is that prior to cinema there were already huge numbers of people in Ireland from all classes who regularly enjoyed proto-cinematic experiences through such entertainments as the magic lantern or slide projector, the immersive large-scale paintings known as panoramas and tableaux vivants or theatrical posed static representations of paintings, statues and events. Without these entertainments many developed by Irish inventors and pioneers, not only would cinema's moving pictures have been unimaginable but so too would the cinema space itself and the distribution of film. Ultimately, the book is offered as a contribution towards a deeper understanding of popular visual culture and its intersection with science in Ireland from the 18th century onwards. Kevin Rockett and Emer Rockett's book is a richly researched, engaging picture of visual and optical entertainments in Ireland ranging from the first phantasmagoria shows in the 1790s to the establishment of the first purpose-built cinemas. The authors build on recent work influenced by the idea that the site of an exhibition helped determine not only how it took place but the meanings it produced and the experience of its audience.

Media Connections between Britain and Ireland Mark O'Brien, 2022-09-05 This book examines the relationship between Britain and Ireland, specifically the central role played by print and broadcast media in communicating political, cultural and social differences and similarities between the two islands. The relationship between Ireland and Great Britain has a long and complex history. Given their geographical proximity and shared language, one key dimension of this relationship has been the communication media, print and electronic, that have mediated this relationship. This book addresses this important but relatively neglected topic at a critical time in Anglo-Irish relations. Taking the long view as well as looking in detail at specific episodes the contributors map British Irish interactions in print and broadcast media This volume assesses the proprietorial and journalistic connections between various media institutions the conditions under which media organisations operated and distribution channels employed It considers media influences in terms of the role of media organs in constructing national identity and promoting social change Furthermore this book also considers news flows between the two islands censorship in times of conflict cross border influences of television and the relationship between cinema and television The chapters in this book were originally published as a special issue of the journal Media History
