Parliament. House of Commons. Home Affairs Committee, 2014 This report considers the events surrounding the police raid on 14 August of the home of Sir Cliff Richard OBE in Berkshire and the circumstances under which the BBC came to have advance information about the raid It concludes that South Yorkshire Police's handling of this situation was inept The naming of suspects or the confirming of a name when it is put to a force when there is no operational need to do so is wrong South Yorkshire Police should not have tried to cut a deal with the journalist but rather approached senior BBC executives to explain the damage that such premature disclosure could do to the investigation The BBC's Director General Lord Hall confirmed to the Committee that the BBC would act on such requests from Chief Constables In the absence of any such approach from South Yorkshire the BBC was well within its rights to run the story although as a result Sir Cliff himself has suffered enormous irreparable damage to his reputation It appears that the BBC reporter clearly identified the source of his leak as Operation Yewtree It is unfortunate therefore that South Yorkshire Police did not notify the Metropolitan Police so that the source of the Yewtree leak could be investigated
