lack of durability which is said to distinguish the painting of the present as compared to that of the past The great inexorable Public is the master the painter its unwilling but submissive servant Nevertheless conditions of permanency and durability are still wrought and achieved in the modern field of carriage and wagon painting conditions which conform with a large measure of credit to the art of painting to the other resultant durable effects obtained along nearly all other lines of industrial activity Our painting today fails to excel the painting of tradition simply because the exactions of a wonderfully fast age tend directly to promote failure rather than to aid success The job of painting which withstands fierce and continuous attacks of service for a reasonable length of time must be justly registered durable regardless of what it would have been termed in the past Past conditions and circumstances cannot fairly be used as yardsticks to measure what we at present call beautiful and enduring in the art of painting In the matter of tools appliances for handling work colors and varnishes used carriage and wagon painting amid the advances made in all the other constructive departments of industry has enjoyed improvement Brushes in greater variety finer in quality and better adapted to the practical needs of the painter are in evidence Colors of a wider range of hues tints shades and incomparably finer as to quality than were obtainable formerly are now at the disposal of the painter And the varnishes surely they have been improved made more reliable more uniform in quality better behaved and more suited to the ever varying requirements of service Carriage and wagon painting has become as much of a business as an artistic venture Commercial conditions have of late years so shaped themselves that the painter to successfully conduct a painting business must of necessity study the profound science of business quite as thoroughly as he does the science of building paint structures and developing color effects He imparts a moral business and mechanical force to the community He now has available sources of education more easily within his reach than at any former time Paint trade literature so far as it is represented in magazine form at least is at hand to render him aid and encouragement He is rapidly becoming better fitted to meet the expanding limits of competition to critically analyze both the theory and practice of painting to become in short a greater power for good in the community as well as a studious and original mechanic To be continue in this ebook Scientific American ,1874 The Framed World Mike Robinson,David Picard,2009 Why do tourists take photos of certain things and not of others Why do tourists take photos at all How do photos build places how do they change and shape lives An interdisciplinary team of contributors from across the globe explore such questions as they examine the relationships between photography and tourism and tourists Court of Appeals: Papers On Appeal ,1892
