Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or olfaction, how many and what kind of chemoreceptors we possess, and how we respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and in the air (smell) are all determined by the number of receptors we have. The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular molecules. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the sense of touch, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

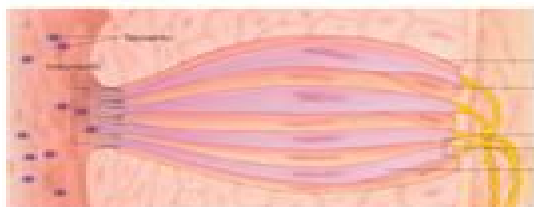

Concentrations

Taste molecules vary depending on the concentration. The amount of a substance in a given volume of air, for low concentrations, taste, and smell molecules may vary.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four types of receptors: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with umami, or the good-taste of meat, fish, and other foods.

The taste bud

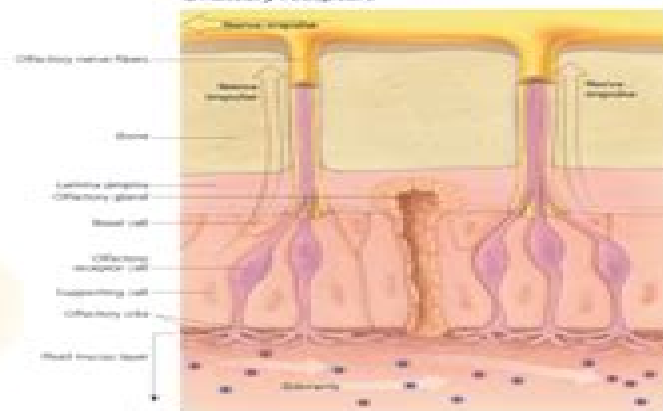

Taste buds, structures that produce taste, have taste receptors on the surface of the tongue. The resulting receptor potential sends to the brain via the gustatory nerve, where the signal is chemically transmitted to the brain via the gustatory nerve. Gustatory cells are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

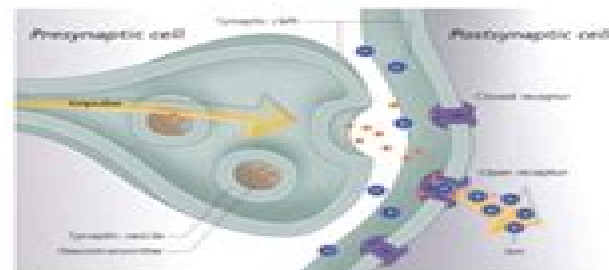

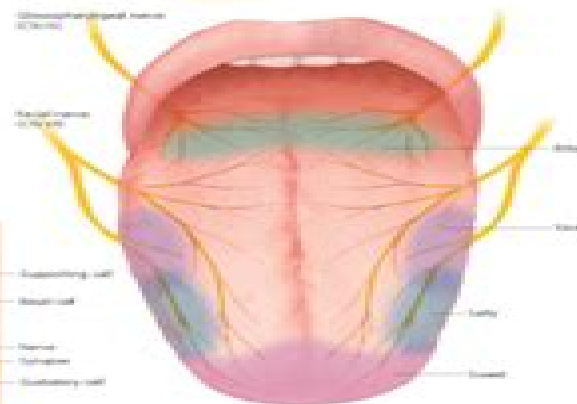

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorous molecules into contact with the olfactory nerve, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors in the nasal cavity are produced by the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are located in the olfactory epithelium. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized tissue in the nasal cavity. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized tissue in the nasal cavity. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized tissue in the nasal cavity.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where "messenger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell. The postsynaptic cell then sends an impulse to the next cell in the chain, continuing the nerve impulse.
