

"A wildlife biologist who has been working full-time as a safari guide since 1986, Ross has had his clothes stolen by hyenas, been chased by lions and buffalo, and once made a narrow escape from a herd of charging elephants.

"He specializes in leading small groups into the East African bush—armed with cameras, however, rather than guns... They make their way to the banks of the Mara River, where they watch 1,500-pound crocodiles turn the annual migration of zebras and wildebeests into a horrific feeding frenzy; they hike into Uganda's Impenetrable Forest for close-up views of rare mountain gorillas. It was here, in 1999, that he and members of his group were attacked by a rebel army of Rwandans who had crossed the Congo border....

"The wildlife stories reveal a quiet humor, an observant eye, and a deep love of and respect for nature—but the massacre in the Impenetrable Forest and its aftermath change the tone of this account from an appealing selection aimed at natural history buffs and armchair adventurers to an appalling reminder to all that the most dangerous beasts out there are human."
