

THE MORAL STATUS OF ANIMALS

FROM REASON AND SYMMETRY, VIA SUFFERING AND RIGHTS, TOWARDS A DISCUSSION OF WILDNESS, DOMESTICATION, AND SPECIES EXTINCTIONS

Throughout history, we humans have used and misused animals to advance our egoistic and anthropocentric purposes. Today, an unfathomable number of wild animals face the ubiquitous threat of extinction due to anthropogenic climate change. Furthermore, domesticated animals—which make up for over 90 percent of the animals in the world—face an unmeasurable amount of suffering on a daily basis, be it in mass-industrial farms and slaughterhouses, or in research laboratories, zoos, and so on. What is, de facto, the moral status of animals? And, more normatively speaking, how should we conceptualize animals' moral standing? This article deals with issues surrounding domesticated animals and wild animals, questioning the ingrained distinction between them, while also challenging the conventional division of labor found within environmental ethics and animal ethics.

Introduction:

Moral Relations, Symmetry, and Rationality

What is, fundamentally, a moral relation? What is it grounded in, what does it consist of? Which capacities do we regard as being of moral relevance? Who is inside and who is outside of our moral sphere, if not to say our moral universe? Asked in a different manner: To whom am I responsible, and to whom do I have duties to fulfill? Is it only my close friends and family? The ones that are near me in space and time, those I interact with on an almost daily basis? Individuals of the same species as I am? Or can I have duties to and responsibility for beings outside of my species—beings that do not look like me, beings I may not have direct contact with, beings that I may never get to meet or even see in my lifetime at all?

In the history of Western philosophy, moral relations have conventionally been interpreted as being of a symmetrical kind, where moral agents have the same duties—or an equal number of duties—to each other. I am responsible for the Other to the extent that, and in the same way as, the Other is responsible for me. This model of symmetry and reciprocity finds its clearest expression in the Kantian moral philosophy, where the criteria for being a moral addressee is predicated upon one's capacity for being a moral agent. If we were to follow the Kantian notion of moral symmetry to its logical endpoint, morality would essentially be a state of equilibrium, where the Other would never do more for you than you would do for the Other, to ensure that no moral agent has a "surplus" or "deficit" of morally favorable actions. This, I would suggest, reduces morality to a zero-sum game. Because in our actual daily lives, we rarely keep score of our actions. More importantly, we usually do more for specific others than they do for us, and vice versa.

A commonsensical example here is the infant.

A newborn child is infinitely dependent on its primary caregivers. The infant has no way of sustaining itself, it lacks the prerequisites for being able to fend for itself. It is at the mercy of its surroundings; it is vulnerable, exposed, in need. It cannot nourish itself, cannot wash itself, nor protect itself from danger, but requires someone to take care of it. The infant cannot do anything to reciprocate nor, so to speak, make up for its dependence. You, on the other hand, have to do everything for it. This, we may be inclined to think, shows us that moral relations are not founded upon, or grounded in, a fundamental symmetry. Because one would not claim that the infant in question does anything morally wrong by only receiving care, and Anthropocentrism and Its Discontents Gary Steiner, 2005-11-06 Anthropocentrism and Its Discontents is the first ever comprehensive examination of views of animals in the history of Western philosophy from Homeric Greece to the twentieth century. In recent decades, increased interest in this area has been accompanied by scholars' willingness to conceive of animal experience in terms of human mental capacities: consciousness, self-awareness, intention, deliberation, and in some instances at least limited moral agency. This conception has been facilitated by a shift from behavioral to cognitive ethology, the science of animal behavior, and by attempts to affirm the essential similarities between the psychophysical makeup of human beings and animals. Gary Steiner sketches the terms of the current debates about animals and relates these to their historical antecedents, focusing on both the dominant anthropocentric voices and those recurring voices that instead assert a fundamental kinship relation between human beings and animals. He concludes with a discussion of the problem of balancing the need to recognize a human indebtedness to animals and the natural world with the need to preserve a sense of the uniqueness and dignity of the human individual.

Creatures Like Us? Lynne Sharpe, 2015-11-24 As a child brought up among animals, Lynne Sharpe never doubted they were essentially creatures like us. It came as a shock to learn that others did not agree. Here she exposes the bizarre way in which many philosophers, including even some great and humane ones, have repeatedly talked and written about animals. They have discussed the topic in terms of non-existent abstract animals, conceived as defective humans, entirely neglecting the experience of people who have wide practical knowledge of companion animals such as horses and dogs through working with them. She testifies to the interesting nature of these creatures' lives, noting that the usual narrow approach to animals carries with it also a distorted notion of human life as essentially cerebral and language-centred.

Animals and the Moral Community Gary Steiner, 2008-09-15 Gary Steiner argues that ethologists and philosophers in the analytic and continental traditions have largely failed to advance an adequate explanation of animal behavior. Critically engaging the positions of Marc Hauser, Daniel Dennett, Donald Davidson, John Searle, Martin Heidegger, and Hans Georg Gadamer, among others, Steiner shows how the Western philosophical tradition has forced animals into human experiential categories in order to make sense of their cognitive abilities and moral status, and how desperately we need a new approach to animal rights. Steiner rejects the traditional assumption that a lack of formal rationality confers an inferior moral status on animals vis-à-vis human beings. Instead, he offers an associationist view of animal cognition in which animals grasp and adapt to their environments without employing concepts or intentionality. Steiner challenges the standard assumption of liberal individualism according to which humans have no obligations of justice toward animals. Instead, he advocates a cosmic holism that attributes a moral status to animals equivalent to that of people. Arguing for a relationship of justice between humans and nature, Steiner emphasizes our kinship with animals and the fundamental
