Stocks Bonds And Gold:

Is Gold a Hedge or a Safe Haven? an Analysis of Stocks, Bonds and Gold Dirk G. Baur, 2015 Is gold a hedge against sudden changes in stock and bond returns or does it instead have a subtly different property that of being a safe haven This paper addresses these two interlinked questions A safe haven is defined as a security that is uncorrelated with stocks and bonds in case of a market crash This is counterpoised against a hedge defined as a security that is uncorrelated with stocks or bonds on average We study constant and time varying relationships between stocks bonds and gold in order to investigate the existence of a hedge and a safe haven The empirical analysis examines US UK and German stock and bond returns and their relationship with gold returns We find that gold is a hedge against stocks on average and a safe haven in extreme stock market conditions This finding suggests that the existence of a safe haven enhances the stability and resiliency of financial markets since it reduces investors losses at times when a reduction is needed the most A portfolio analysis further shows that the safe haven property is extremely short lived so that an investor buying gold one day after a shock loses money
