A Computational Model of Natural Language Communication Roland R. Hausser,2006-09-28 Everyday life would be easier if we could simply talk with machines instead of having to program them Before such talking robots can be built however there must be a theory of how communicating with natural language works This requires not only a grammatical analysis of the language signs but also a model of the cognitive agent with interfaces for recognition and action an internal database and an algorithm for reading content in and out In Database Semantics these ingredients are used for reconstructing natural language communication as a mechanism for transferring content from the database of the speaker to the database of the hearer Part I of this book presents a high level description of an artificial agent which humans can freely communicate with in their accustomed language Part II analyzes the major constructions of natural language i e intra and extrapositional functor argument structure coordination and coreference in the speaker and the hearer mode Part III defines declarative specifications for fragments of English which are used for an implementation in Java The book provides researchers graduate students and software engineers with a functional framework for the theoretical analysis of natural language communication and for all practical applications of natural language processing

These bioactive compounds have been shown to influence the composition and function of the gut microbiota, thereby affecting nutrient utilization, immune responses, and the overall well-being of the host organism. Research in this field has witnessed significant advancements, but there is still much to be explored and understood. The goal of this Research Topic is to shed light on the recent advances in the field of utilizing natural plant extracts and probiotics to modulate host-gut microbiome interactions in animals.
