Social Capital John Field, 2008-04-30 The term social capital is a way of defining the intangible resources of community shared values and trust upon which we draw in daily life It has achieved considerable international currency across the social sciences through the very different work of Pierre Bourdieu in France and James Coleman and Robert Putnam in the United States and has been widely taken up within politics and sociology as an explanation for the decline in social cohesion and community values in western societies It has also been adopted by policy makers particularly in international governmental bodies such as the World Bank This fully revised second edition of Social Capital provides a thorough overview of the intense and fast moving debate surrounding this subject This clear and comprehensive introduction explains the theoretical underpinning of the subject the empirical work that has been done to explore its operation and the influence that it has had on public policy and practice It includes guides to further reading and a list of the most important websites

The Influences of Social Capital on Lifelong Learning Among Adults Who Did Not Finish High School. NCSALL Occasional Paper Clare L. Strawn, 2003 This study of social capital employs data from the Longitudinal Study of Adult Learning LSAL funded by the National Center for the Study of Adult Learning and Literacy NCSALL and conducted at Portland State University to increase understanding of the learning process of adults with limited formal education It provides longitudinal data on how people continue learning in multiple contexts through formal adult education programs and in their daily lives This paper is presented in two sections The first is a theoretical exploration of the intersections of critical literacy adult learning and social capital theories The intent of this discussion is to introduce key concepts from multiple disciplines and develop a synthetic model of social capital influences on lifelong learning SCILL in which adults construct their social environment and the discourses that influence their learning strategies The second section empirically tests a piece of the SCILL Model related to the structural and discursive dimensions of social capital using data from the first wave of the LSAL Multiple measures of social capital are detailed The author argues that in addition to the structural dimension of social capital local discourse generated through interaction is an interpretive dimension of social capital The discussion ties the empirical and theoretical elements offering implications for the study of adult education participation in adult education for research on social capital Appendices include 1 Longitudinal Study of Adult Literacy Study Design 2 Instrument Items from LSAL Wave 1 3 Confirmatory Factor Analysis of Lifelong Learning 4 Tables of Descriptive Statistics and Univariate Analyses of Indicators 5 Items Parameters in Final Models and 6 Model Calibration Contains 18 tables 3 figures and 6 footnotes Lifelong Learning, Intergenerational Learning, and Social Capital Ann Kristin Boström, 2003

Do Acquaintances and Friends Make Us Learn? Social Capital and Lifelong Learning in Germany Anna-Elisabeth Thum, Miroslav Bablavy, 2014 This paper examines the relationship between social capital and adult learning We test this association empirically using measures of various types of social capital and adult learning based on the German Socioeconomic Panel We use predetermined measures of social capital to exclude social skills or friends encountered during the adult education class Fixed effects for latent underlying factors such as deep personality traits and instrumental variables account for changing personality traits We find that most of our social capital measures have a significant and positive impact on the probabilities for investing in various types of adult learning The size of the effect varies across the different measures between increasing the probability of participating in adult learning by 0.04% to increasing the probability by 17% We find evidence that acquaintances are more likely to increase participation in adult learning than friends
