

International Collectors Library presents—

The Complete Tales of WASHINGTON IRVING

Collectors have for the first time experienced the tales that not perfectly capture the magical atmosphere of the Hudson River Valley at the close of the 18th century. Probably every body knows the story of the wild-eyed Dutchman, fleeing on horse back the Headless Horseman—and the tale of the affable but bespectacled Rip Van Winkle. Yet there are just two among the scores of stories that show Washington Irving a writer and appreciative audience sharing his lifetime and have continued to make his name a household word down to the present day. There are such delightful and enchanting entertainments as "The Specter Convent," "Dolphin Mayday," "The Specter Bridgroom," "The Story of the Young Rake," and "Annette's Disfigurement"—the names just a few. There are ghost stories, comic sketches and jolly romances from America's first master of the demanding art of short story writing.

Washington Irving lived a long and productive life, and his work exerted a serious influence upon many important American writers who followed him. When he died in 1859, in Tarrytown, New York—near his beloved Sleepy Hollow—our contemporary writer that "they made from his and near solemnly looked for the last time on his genial face, and murmured his name as that of a personal friend and national benefactor." The sentiment is perfectly justified—for Irving was a great entertainer, a witty storyteller, and a consummate artist.
