

THE CONSULTANT

A NOVEL OF COMPUTER CRIME

JOHN McNEIL

CHAPTER 1

It was a dark, rainy night in the city of New York. The rain fell in heavy, slanting sheets, reflecting the city lights and creating a shimmering, chaotic pattern on the pavement. The streets were empty, save for a few late-night stragglers and the occasional taxi cab weaving through the slick surfaces. In the heart of the city, a lone figure walked towards a small, dimly lit building that looked like it had been abandoned for years. The figure was a man, dressed in a dark, heavy coat and a fedora, his face partially obscured by the shadows and the rain. He moved with a purpose, his steps echoing on the wet ground. The building he approached had a sign that read "The Consultant" in a simple, sans-serif font. The door was slightly ajar, and a faint light emanated from within, suggesting someone was still inside. The man hesitated for a moment, looking back over his shoulder at the dark, rain-soaked streets. He then pushed open the door and stepped inside. The interior of the building was dark and cluttered, with papers and books scattered across the floor. A desk in the center of the room was covered with a large, glowing computer monitor and a keyboard. The man walked towards the desk, his eyes fixed on the screen. The screen displayed a complex, abstract pattern of lines and dots, resembling a digital landscape or a map of some kind. The man's expression was one of intense concentration as he studied the display. He reached out and touched the screen, his finger hovering just above the glowing surface. The pattern on the screen shifted and changed in response to his touch, creating a sense of movement and interaction. The man's breath caught in his throat as he realized the significance of what he was seeing. He had found something, something that could change everything. He turned away from the desk and walked towards the back of the building, where a small, hidden entrance led to a secret passage. The passage was narrow and dimly lit, with a single light bulb hanging from the ceiling. The man walked quickly, his footsteps echoing on the concrete walls. He emerged into a small, cluttered room that looked like a storage area. On a shelf in the corner of the room, he found a small, black, rectangular object. He picked it up and examined it closely. It was a small, portable device, possibly a computer or a communication tool. The man's eyes widened as he recognized the device. It was a piece of technology that had been lost for years, a relic of a forgotten era. He had found it, and now he knew what he had to do. He turned back towards the door and looked out into the dark, rainy night. The rain had stopped for a moment, and the city lights were visible through the wet streets. The man took a deep breath and stepped out into the night. He walked quickly, his coat dripping with rain. He knew he was being watched, but he didn't care. He had found what he needed, and now he was ready to use it. He walked towards the city center, where the lights were bright and the crowds were thick. He knew he was in danger, but he didn't care. He had found the truth, and now he was ready to reveal it. He walked quickly, his coat dripping with rain. He knew he was being watched, but he didn't care. He had found what he needed, and now he was ready to use it. He walked towards the city center, where the lights were bright and the crowds were thick. He knew he was in danger, but he didn't care.
