✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Nursing is an objectively undervalued profession that is essential to a functioning hospital environment. It is established that theory has a valuable input on the effectiveness of the nursing staff in real-life situations (Oducado et al., 2019). However, it is often the case that the nursing theories are not prioritized in everyday scenarios, with the personnel giving preference to customs. Lastly, an increase in the gap might lead to a decrease in the quality of patient care (Salifu et al., 2018). Since the nurses do not always know the underlying reasons for the customs they follow in practice, they might not act in the most efficient or correct ways in unusual situations. Since the nursing theories are often relatively abstract, there is an established lack of faith in nursing research which needs to be addressed.

Potential Solutions

The potential solutions include increasing clinical time, increasing motivation, and educating the education staff on the problem. Firstly, according to Safazadeh et al.
