

All About Magnets

By _____

What are magnets made of?	What are the two main types of magnets?	What are some uses of magnets?

What Is a Magnet?

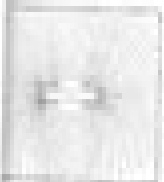

A magnet is a rock or material that can attract, or pull toward it, objects that are made with iron.

They have a north and south pole. The pole is where the magnet's pull is the strongest.

Magnetic Poles

Directions: Draw a bar magnet. Label the north and south poles.

Magnetic Field

Magnets have a magnetic field. This is the area around a magnet that it can attract or repel other objects.

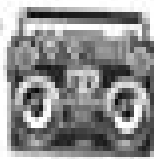

Magnets have different strengths. The closer you get to a magnet, the stronger the pull or push is.

Electromagnets

Electromagnets work differently. Magnets can be turned on and off, depending on whether electricity flows in or out.

Examples of an electromagnet: the changed tool that lifts things, a crane at a scrapyard.

Electromagnets are used in hospitals and factories. They are also used in cranes to lift heavy things, like for building structures.

Uses of Magnets

Magnets are used in everything from a car starting the engine to a compass. They are found everywhere.

Using Magnets to Compare Properties of Matter

Magnets are used to compare the properties of matter. They can attract or repel certain materials, but not others. This helps us understand how different materials are made.

Vocabulary Matching

Directions: Match the word to its definition.

1. Magnet: _____

2. Magnetic field: _____

3. Electromagnet: _____

4. Magnetic poles: _____

5. Magnetic strength: _____

Now What You Know
