

CHAPTER 1

What Is Technical Writing?

CHAPTER GOALS

1. Show where technical writing fits into the spectrum of interpersonal communications
2. Illustrate how technical writing differs from other forms of writing

TECHNICAL WRITING is a broad term that encompasses a wide variety of documents in science, engineering, and the skilled trades. The major types of documents in technical writing can be grouped into four major categories (Fig. 1.1):

- Reports and communications in day-to-day business
- Technical papers, magazine articles, books, and theses for purposes of education, teaching, and the sharing of information and knowledge
- Patents
- Operational manuals, instructions, or procedures

Most technical writing in day-to-day business involves the preparation of various "reports" (Fig. 1.1). Writing reports is common for many technical people because reports are a major part of the development and application of technology. Very few companies pay technical professionals a salary without written words to implement and evaluate what has been worked on or developed. For example, if an engineer spends a year developing a new transmission for a car, several types of reports are needed for the design, evaluation, and implementation of the new component. Engineering must also report to management on the viability of design, costs,
