

Technical Communication:

Technical communication is a broad field and includes any form of communication that exhibits one or more of the following characteristics:

- Communicating about technical or specialized topics, such as computer applications, medical procedures, or environmental regulations.
- Communicating by using technology, such as web pages, help files, or social media sites.
- Providing instructions about how to do something, regardless of how technical the task is or even if technology is used to create or distribute that communication.

According to Markel, technical communication has seven major characteristics, and these are shown below:

- Addresses particular readers
- Helps readers solve problems
- Reflects an organizations goals and culture
- Is produced collaboratively
- Uses design to increase readability
- Consists of words or graphics or both
- Is produced using high tech tools

Objectives of Technical Communication:

Most technical communication addresses one of three main purposes:

- To inform.
- To instruct.
- To persuade.

Distinction Between General & Technical Communication:

General & Technical Communication

- General:

- Contains a general message
- Informal in style and approach
- No set pattern
- Mostly oral
- Not always for a specific audience
- No use of technical terms or graphics

- Technical:

- Contains a technical message
- Mostly formal in style and approach
- Follows a set pattern
- Both oral and written
- Always for a specific audience
- Frequently involves jargons, graphics etc.

Language as a tool of Communication:

Languages are nothing but the communication of one soul to another through written symbols and sounds. The effective communication is made possible with the help of language. Language employs a combination of words to communicate ideas in a meaningful way. By changing the word order in a sentence, you can change its meaning, and even make it meaningless. Language is created by people. It does not exist in isolation or outside the minds of people. It is created by
