

MESSAGE HANDLING LOOPS

- Each loop is an independent process operating in parallel with the other process loops
- Process loops use queued state machines to implement behavior
- Queued transfer messages between the process loops
- Queues can be referenced by name, therefore many of the message paths are not visually evident by wires

System Manager

- Maintains the high-level operating mode of the overall system and issues commands to the task loops
- The task loops issue alert messages to the SysMgr and can also directly message other task loops to reduce complexity of the SysMgr state machine
