Sven, 1999 Space for the 21st Century Michael Simpson Ph D, 2016-05-12 FOREWORD By Bruce McCandless II Former NASA Astronaut This volume is the fifth in the series on contemporary space topics by the Aerospace Technology Working Group with support from Secure World Foundation the International Space University and the International Institute of Space Commerce It deals principally with the topic of sustainability of space operations In all fields of challenging endeavor actually accomplishing an objective e g putting a satellite into orbit comes first followed by exploitation or commercialization and lastly by a realization that the resource is finite Such finite ness may come from considerations of pollution e g space debris propulsion effluent or of actual limitations on the availability of the resource e g crowding of Geostationary Earth Orbit GEO Both of these topics are among those discussed in detail in this volume Developing countries in particular may find such considerations too burdensome and this begs the need for regulation to avoid the classic Tragedy of the Commons situation In the case of orbital debris we have collectively arrived at a point where tens of millions of tiny pieces of debris are currently in orbit decaying at diverse rates in a situation where a single flake of paint has been demonstrated to be capable of causing damage when impacting at high relative velocities At the other end of the spectrum defunct satellites e g ESA's Envisat present discrete problems worthy of individual retrieval disposal efforts but fraught with complications arising from ownership to potentially still effective ITAR constraints on access to onboard technology And of course the managers of the International Space Station are absolutely paranoid about higher altitude orbital debris eventually decaying to and ultimately impacting their very large orbiting facility While space may realistically be dubbed infinite very specific orbits or sets of orbits have practical capacity limits In GEO for example spacing of satellites along it are subject to constraints arising from use of the same radio frequency spectra and the size of ground based antennas required to spatially discriminate between adjacent satellites In popular high inclination sun synchronous Earth imaging orbits these all converge near the poles creating a traffic management concern arising from the risk of collision The subject of green propellants is treated from several aspects The Liquid Oxygen Liquid Hydrogen system while yielding only water vapor from combustion may have a significant carbon footprint associated with the manufacture of the LH2 from methane or methanol Aluminum oxide an exhaust product of common solid propellant boosters is generally regarded as inert but the inhalation of fine particles of it can cause pulmonary fibrosis or other lung damage in humans Additionally the need for oxidizer depletion shutdown in the family of hydrazine oxidizer booster stages results in significant quantities of UDMH for example being dispersed upon impact of the early stages No Foreword can do adequate justice to the carefully developed material within the publication itself For a detailed and thought provoking coverage of the principal topics associated with the sustainability of space operations this book is highly recommended authoritative and a good read Space, the Dormant Frontier Joan Johnson-Freese, Roger Handberg, 1997-09-23 Rather than examining only the civil or military side of the US space program as have many books in the past Space the Dormant Frontier takes a unique look at the space program as a whole Part of the book's treatise is that the two communities must stop ignoring each other if the US space program is to move forward beyond being a science project jobs program or political football How the program got into its current semi desperate state is also examined as history has given space a legacy once glorious now an albatross The authors include information and analysis on the military and civil space programs challenge the perspective of the Washington Beltway analyst with vested interests in the status quo and make policy recommendations based on realism rather than idealism Space Missions of the 21st Century Arnold Ringstad, 2016 Compelling narrative nonfiction text presents the major space missions of the 21st century featuring the intrigue and excitement behind the missions Additional features to aid comprehension include a table of contents fact filled captions and callouts infographics a glossary a listing of source notes sources for further research and an introduction to the author The Space Industry of the Future Mark W.
