Microdistribution of Foraminifera in a Single Bed of the Monterey Formation, Monterey County, California Roberta K. Smith, Martin A. Buzas, 1986 While several papers exist on the small scale spatial distribution of living foraminifera almost no work exists on the small scale spatial distribution of fossils The present study took 24 5 ml replicates 10 cm apart along one bed of the Monterey Formation in California The mean density for all replicates is 6084 96 with a standard deviation of 8776 95 Both inspection and a cluster analysis of the data indicate replicates 20 24 have a much higher density and different rank order of abundance than replicates 1 19 The mean density for the total of all species in replicates 1 19 is 2387 47 with a standard deviation of 1175 58 For replicates 20 24 the mean density is 20135 40 with a standard deviation of 11181 40 The spatial variability is so great that four replicates more than commonly taken would only allow us to be 95% confident that we are within 50% of the true mean Because age determination is based on presence of particular taxa rather than on densities stratigraphic assignment would still be possible The three species dominating the 1 19 group make up from 86% to 99% of the fauna The three species dominating the 20 24 group make up from 77% to 85% of the fauna Two of these are also dominant in the 1 19 group but the most dominant species in the 20 24 group constitutes only Surveying Natural Populations Lee-Ann C.
