

A Contrastive Analysis of the French and Embósi Prepositions: The Case Study of 'Dans' and 'Tsó'

Yvon-Pierre Ndong Ibara

Université Marien Ngouabi, Brazzaville, Congo

This contribution focuses on the comparison of the syntactic and semantic analysis of the preposition with particular emphasis on the French preposition 'dans' and the Embósi 'tsá'. It comes out from the discussion that the French preposition 'dans' substantiates the three semantic properties of preposition namely spatial, time and abstract features. Embósi 'tsá' on the contrary, instances two properties only notably spatial and time references. This analysis demonstrates that these two prepositions under discussion share the same syntactic distributions regarding their spatial and temporal properties. What distinguishes the two prepositions is the abstract and discursive property of 'dans' together with its collocations with number which is not attested in Embósi.

Key Words: French, Embósi, preposition, contrastive analysis, temporality, spatiality, abstract distribution, collocation

Introduction

The objective of this contribution is to carry out a contrastive analysis of prepositions based on an Indo-European language (French) and a Bantu language (Embósi). This article broadens my previous works (2006, 2011) which compares English and French prepositions as well as linguistic interference between French and Embósi. The paper addresses the following questions: (i) How does French or Embósi use prepositions to locate something in the space? (ii) What are the different usages of the prepositions 'dans' and 'tsó' in the languages under scrutiny? What are the similar and dissimilar points between the two prepositions under discussion?

1- General features on prepositions

Before embarking on the scrutiny on the contrastive analysis of the prepositions 'dans' and 'tsó', it is worth elaborating on the theoretical background on preposition. This analysis has twofold objectives. Firstly, we will be concerned with the semantics of preposition and finally on its syntactic aspects. As Catherine Chauvin (2011, p.2) writes

Most 'words', taken here in the broadest of senses, have at least several uses, and, perhaps, several meanings as well. It is the case of prepositions, and perhaps even more dramatically than in other domains, as prepositions have many uses which often turn out to be particularly difficult to deal with, classify, and ultimately, analyse.

As things stands, it comes out that prepositions are very polysemous. This polysemy is reinforced by the different lexical items that c-command preposition. In addition to subadjacency, we should consider the context in which the word -preposition- is used. That is to say, the meaning of words is generally context-based. To quote Catherine Chauvin again (2011, p.3),

Within the enonciativist framework, prepositions are not thought to be spatial or temporal or "something else" (see below) in nature; they may have more "spatial", "temporal", or "other" uses but these are always strictly context-based and are not to be thought to be intrinsically linked to the preposition.

It appears that what is more striking in deciding on the nature of the meaning of prepositions is more the context than the preposition itself. Putting things in quite a similar way, the meaning of the preposition is immediately encoded in the co-text which covers the context and the distributional environment in which we find this preposition. This is to defend that the polysemy approach on words is one of the good ways to account for word meaning because monosemy is too restricted. In the words of Tyler and Evans (2003,p.7)

The question of how best to model the distinct meanings associated with a single lexical form has been approached from three perspectives. These are homonymy, monosemy and polysemy. [...] The position we advocate is that of polysemy. A polysemy approach suggests that the meanings associated with a spatial particle such as over are related in some fashion. [...] Our account of polysemy holds that a linguistic form is paired at the conceptual level, not only with a single meaning, but rather with a network of distinct but related meanings. Hence, the meanings associated with a particular form constitute a semantic network.

Spatial Prepositions A Case Study From French:

Spatial Prepositions Claude Vandeloise, 1991-10-08 This striking study of the meaning and use of the major spatial prepositions in French provides valuable insight into how the human mind organizes spatial relationships. Most previous analyses of spatial prepositions have assumed that their semantic properties can be adequately explained by familiar logical and geometrical concepts. Thus the standard view of the preposition in as it appears in the sentence the ball is in the bag postulates that it refers to the geometrical relation of inclusion. This paradigm however falters when faced with the contrast in acceptability between sentences such as the bulb is in the socket and the bottle is in the cap. The force exerted by the landmark, a conceptually fixed object on the target, a moveable object is crucial in this difference: the functional notion of containment seems more operational in the use of the preposition in than inclusion. That is, what are taken to be the landmark and the target depend greatly on the functions these objects serve in the human scheme. This offers important clues to otherwise problematic linguistic quirks such as why one sleeps in one's bed while one is said to lie on one's deathbed. While many of the examples apply in English as well as French, there are some noteworthy differences: in French one sits on a chair but in a couch. Vandeloise convincingly argues that it is precisely this subjective element which makes a standard geometrical account unfeasible.

The Semantics of Dynamic Space in French Michel Aurnague, Dejan Stosic, 2019-07-29 Research on the semantics of spatial markers in French is known mainly through Vandeloise's 1986/1991 work on static prepositions. However, interest in the expression of space in French goes back to the mid 1970s and focused first on verbs denoting changes in space whose syntactic properties were related to specific semantic distinctions such as the opposition between movement and displacement. This volume provides an overview of recent studies on the semantics of dynamic space in French and addresses important questions about motion expression among which goal bias and asymmetry of motion, the status of locative PPs, the expression of manner, fictive or non actual motion. Descriptive, experimental and formal or computational analyses are presented providing complementary perspectives on the main issue. The volume is intended for researchers and advanced students wishing to learn about both spatial semantics in French and recent debates on the representation of motion events in language and cognition.

in Language and Cognition Stephen C. Levinson, 2003-03-20 Languages differ in how they describe space and such differences between languages can be used to explore the relation between language and thought This 2003 book shows that even in a core cognitive domain like spatial thinking language influences how people think memorize and reason about spatial relations and directions After outlining a typology of spatial coordinate systems in language and cognition it is shown that not all languages use all types and that non linguistic cognition mirrors the systems available in the local language The book reports on collaborative interdisciplinary research involving anthropologists linguists and psychologists conducted in many languages and cultures around the world which establishes this robust correlation The overall results suggest that thinking in the cognitive sciences underestimates the transformative power of language on thinking The book will be of interest to linguists psychologists anthropologists and philosophers and especially to students of spatial cognition
