Teaching Strategies For Constructivist And Developmental Counselor Education:

Teaching Strategies for Constructivist and Developmental Counselor Education Garrett McAuliffe, Karen Eriksen, 2001-12-30 An urgent need exists for a guide to innovative mental health education. Despite the hundreds of programs in existence for training students in counseling, human services, social work, and psychology, teachers in such programs have relied on an informal network of information exchange to guide their teaching practice. Yet constructivist and developmental theories now point to sound innovative practices for teaching. This volume delineates some of those practices. The authors take the position that despite years of research on effective adult education, university teaching fails in practice to incorporate research-supported teaching principles. Current university instruction is still dominated by the teacher as authority model in which he or she downloads information from the front of the class and expects students to regurgitate it in papers and on exams. This book seeks to counter the limitations of these often unquestioned methods. The social constructionist and constructive developmental paradigms undergird the descriptions of counselor preparation strategies offered in this book. Such strategies are characterized by the themes of meaning making, collaboration, equality, and activity in the learning environment. Handbook of Counselor Preparation Garrett McAuliffe, Karen Eriksen, 2011 This definitive single volume guide is the first of its kind on teaching and developing counselor educator programs that embrace constructivist and developmental theory. Leading scholars and experts offer practical advice on teaching courses in every area of counseling practice. As a result, the book is ideal for current and future counselor educators and supervisors as well as faculty in other helping professions. The authors seek to inspire educators to empower and involve, to risk losing control over subject matter, to hear student voices, to pose dilemmas, and to challenge their own assumptions in the presence of their students using constructivist, developmental, and experiential thinking and strategies. Handbook of Counselor Preparation Garrett McAuliffe, Karen Eriksen, ACES, 2010-12-01 Published in cooperation with the Association of Counselor Education and Supervision (ACES). An Engaged Learner: A pocket resource for building community skills Rebecca Nthogo Lekoko, 2013-08-09. Not many of us get a chance to share their teaching/learning experiences with others. Here I am sharing my experiences by focusing on a fact that students we teach are on transit; they eventually leave schools and proceed with their lives in their respective communities. Our social and pedagogical obligation as educators is to teach them skills to use after exiting educational institutions that is helping them gain community skills. The development of community skills starts with an understanding that communities and schools interlink. That is, learners who go to school expect to use the knowledge they gain to serve their communities. This calls for a broader vision of learning that goes beyond the four walls of classrooms. It is an ideology that persuades educators to produce graduates with apposite levels of academic achievements as well as broad community skills like ability to think, be responsible, make decisions, and solve problems. Everyone almost every day uses these skills. Educators thus are pressed to think of ways to knit together learning and community's aspirations. This can be done by engaging learners in activities that help build their community skills. Every educator teaches these skills consciously and unconsciously. This resource contributes some ideas and processes that can enhance educators' role of imparting community development skills.

Preparing Counselors Garrett McAuliffe, Karen Eriksen, Association for Counselor Education and Supervision, 2000. Written for those who will educate future counselors and psychotherapists, this book marks out a vision for counselor and psychotherapist training for the postmodern era. The book details specific practices that are grounded in constructivist and developmental principles, including approaches to classroom instruction, field supervision, curriculum, admissions, student evaluation, and multicultural awareness. Committed to constructivist and developmental teaching in counselor education, the authors contend that these practices are critical for preparing thoughtful creative mental health practitioners Part one outlines the general constructivist worldview upon which the book is based and offers background on what is known about the psychology of learning Guidelines for constructivist teaching are explicated from these principles Part two suggests the application of constructivist principles to the overall design of counselor education programs The extensive use of democratic groups cohorts and narrative generating activities are considered Specific attention is given to reconstructing the admissions and evaluation process in a more dialogical multicultural direction Part three offers illustrations of counselor education course designs that use constructivist principles Part four concludes with a discussion of why such programmatic and teaching ideas haven't been implemented more frequently and what it might take to persuade counselor educators to integrate constructivist and developmental thought into their programs Contains an index and references at the end of each chapter GCP
