The Binder39s Road Illumination:

Roadway Lighting Design Guide American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials, 2005 This guide replaces the 1984 publication entitled An Informational Guide for Roadway Lighting It has been revised and brought up to date to reflect current practices in roadway lighting The guide provides a general overview of lighting systems from the point of view of the transportation departments and recommends minimum levels of quality The guide incorporates the illuminance and luminance design methods but does not include the small target visibility STV method Roadway Lighting Handbook United States. Federal Highway Administration. Office of Traffic Operations, 1978 A Guide for the Design of Road Traffic Lights, 1988

Lighting Problems in Highway Traffic Erik Ingelstam, 2014-06-20 Lighting Problems in Highway Traffic provides information pertinent to the problems in highway traffic This book discusses a very complicated system of problems of greatest significance for road safety during dark hours Organized into 11 chapters this book begins with an overview of the information capacity of the human eye that is dependent on physiological physical and psychological factors This text then examines the part played by the vision in the driving of vehicles Other chapters consider the visual acuity which varies greatly with the luminance of objects with their contrasts and with the presence of uneven luminosity conditions such as one encounters on the highways This book discusses as well the difference between the illumination concept and the luminance concept in road and street lighting The final chapter deals with the design of lower headlight beams This book is a valuable resource for experts in different fields of lighting research

Improved Roadway Illumination: Information Resource Road Illumination Devices Standards Committee, 2011 Headlamps should illuminate the traffic scene ahead of the vehicle in such a way that the driver can operate the vehicle safely and in a relaxed manner At the same time negative effects on drivers of other vehicles pedestrians and other people should be minimized Various technical parameters such as beam pattern mounting height headlamp aiming and source spectrum can be tuned to find the necessary compromise The physiology of the vision system under specific night time conditions strongly influences these factors and how headlamps can be best optimized for visibility and comfort The SAE Improved Roadway Illumination task force collected and reviewed relevant research on these topics This document is a comprehensive summary of this information The goal is to enable lighting experts advocacy groups and non experts journalists consumer organizations car drivers to better understand the benefits and tradeoffs of improved roadway lighting with modern headlamp technology It should be noted that all studies can not be included in this report but the intent of this document is to provide the reader with a representative sample of the existing research as a starting point Further this document can be updated in the future to reflect new research findings SAE J2738 has been reaffirmed to comply with the SAE 5 Year Review policy

Road Lighting Wout van Bommel, 2014-11-21 This book outlines the underlying principles on which modern road lighting is based and provides the reader with knowledge of how these principles should be applied in practice This book offers a completely fresh approach to the subject reflecting how the technology of road lighting has progressed to keep up with the changes in lamp technology especially in solid state light sources and the increasing awareness of energy use and environmental issues The book is divided into three parts Part One describes lighting of open roads with chapters discussing visual performance and comfort including the effects of mesopic vision and age and international standards and recommendations for road lighting Lighting equipment is introduced specifically lamps and luminaires in terms of their practical properties and features but also the road surface and its characteristics A chapter on Lighting Design makes the link between theory and practice providing the reader with the knowledge needed for effective lighting design including aspects relating to sustainability The final chapter of Part One deals with lighting calculation conventions and measurements Part Two is devoted to light pollution The negative consequences of light pollution are described and tactics to restrict light pollution explained Lighting criteria are defined that can be used by the lighting designer to guarantee installations stay within acceptable limits International standards and recommendations on the restriction of light pollution are discussed Part Three is devoted to tunnel lighting with chapters discussing visual performance in tunnel environments lighting criteria standards and recommendations and concluding with a chapter on tunnel lighting equipment and design This book is a valuable resource for road lighting designers and engineers students of lighting design and engineering town planners traffic engineers environmental specialists and lamp and luminaire developers and manufacturers

Pedestrian Visibility - Low Beam Optimization to Reduce Night-time Fatalities Road Illumination Devices Standards Committee, 2011 The primary purpose of vehicle forward lighting is not to see the world but to see the road In their simplest form headlights help drivers negotiate a safe path on the road They do this by lighting the roadway according to a multitude of specific standards For decades discussions concerning the niceties of illuminating potential obstacles in the roadway were little more than an academic pursuit as there simply were not sufficient lumens available from filament light sources to achieve all of the desired tasks no matter how worthy they might be Not unexpectedly the technology has evolved with the introduction of high output metal halide sources multi task standards combined with multilevel lighting devices and discrete LED sources offering high luminous efficiencies and the means to deliver the light where it can be most useful The question now becomes one of determining where the available light should be directed Every standard advisory group industry manufacturer and every driver might have their particular favorite approach to the question of how best to illuminate the road but few would disagree that a single vulnerable set of candidates to benefit from improved forward lighting exist These are pedestrians walking in the roadway and unfortunately they can exist literally anywhere in the road scene Some regions of the road are clearly more perilous than others specifically those located where the light is weaker on the side of the beam directed toward the opposing lane the left side in the majority of countries Work by Sullivan and Flannagan 2001 Kosmatka 2003 and Sullivan 2007 has demonstrated the fatality rate 2300 fatalities and vulnerability twice as many left crossing than right crossing of pedestrians in the roadway This could lead to the conclusion that it is necessary to put more lumens in the opposing lane left side of the roadway However this is the simple answer the hard questions are how much light where on the left and how can this be achieved The low beam pattern by its nature is a compromise between the need to provide adequate illumination of the road ahead of the vehicle while minimizing the effects of glare to oncoming road users This means that any study to identify improvements in the low beam to achieve better pedestrian visibility must respect the balance between the needs of the vehicle driver and the other road users While various approaches to reduce pedestrian fatalities are being pursued it is clear that the effectiveness of headlighting can play an important role As noted earlier the performance of the low beam light distribution has improved with the introduction of new headlamp technologies and more efficient light sources However the compromise between providing adequate forward illumination while minimizing the effects of glare to the other road users remains a constraint With research findings providing a clearer indication of the nature of the collisions with pedestrians and identifying critical areas in the road scene it is now appropriate to review the requirements of the low beam headlamp system with a focus upon mitigating the pedestrian fatalities The technical report covers technology products or processes which are mature and not likely to change in the foreseeable future
