records and cultural narratives Chandler weaves a tapestry of adventure resilience and collaboration bringing to life the complexities of Sacagawea's character against the backdrop of early 19th century America. The book not only serves as a biography but also highlights significant themes of gender, race, and the intersection of cultures during a transformative period in U.S. history. Katherine Chandler, an esteemed historian and cultural critic, draws upon her extensive academic background and field research in Indigenous studies to present an authentic and nuanced portrayal of Sacagawea. Her passion for illuminating the voices of historically marginalized figures infuses the narrative with depth, and her scholarly acumen ensures that the text is both informative and engaging. Chandler's previous works reflect a commitment to challenging dominant historical tropes, positioning her as a vital voice in contemporary historical literature. This book is highly recommended for readers interested in American history, women's studies, and Indigenous narratives. Chandler's evocative storytelling invites readers to re-imagine the Lewis and Clark Expedition through the eyes of a remarkable woman whose contributions often remain overshadowed. Prepare to be captivated and enlightened by this compelling retelling of a foundational story in American history.

Excerpt: APPENDIX SACAJAWEA From the Lewis and Clark Journal. The extracts from the Journal given below include all that the great explorers had to say about Sacajawea. They are from what I consider the best of all the various editions of the famous Journal, the one edited by the late Elliot Coues and published by Francis P. Harper, New York, in 1893. Fort Mandan, November 11, 1804. The weather is cold. We received the visit of two squaws, Sacajawea, and another prisoner from the Rocky Mountains, purchased by Chaboneau. The Mandans are at this time out hunting buffalo. Fort Mandan, February 11, 1805. About five o'clock, one of the wives of Chaboneau was delivered of a boy, this being her first child. She was suffering considerably when Mr. Jessaume told Captain Lewis that he had frequently administered to persons in her situation a small dose of the rattle of the rattlesnake, which had never failed to hasten delivery. Having some of the rattle, Captain Lewis gave it to Mr. Jessaume, who crumbled two of the rings of it between his fingers and mixing it with a small quantity of water, gave it to her. What effect it may really have had, it might be difficult to determine, but Captain Lewis was informed that she had not taken it more than ten minutes before the delivery took place. Fort Mandan, April 7, 1805. Having made all our arrangements for resuming the journey to the Pacific Ocean, we left the fort about five o'clock in the afternoon. The two interpreters were George Drewyer and Toussaint Chaboneau. The wife, Sacajawea, of Chaboneau, accompanied us with her young child, and we hope may be useful as an interpreter among the Snake Indians. She was herself one of that tribe, but having been taken in war by the
