Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or smelling, to those whose role is to eat and drink, is to help identify food or to help us determine if our environment is safe or threatening. Tasting and smelling are olfactory receptors, specialized receptor cells that respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and in the air (smell). The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular odors. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the sense food substances, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, bitter, sour and salty receptors may taste pleasant.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, have three taste buds. Each taste bud contains gustatory cells, which have three taste buds: salty, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with sweetness, as its signal flows in sweet buds.

The taste bud

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

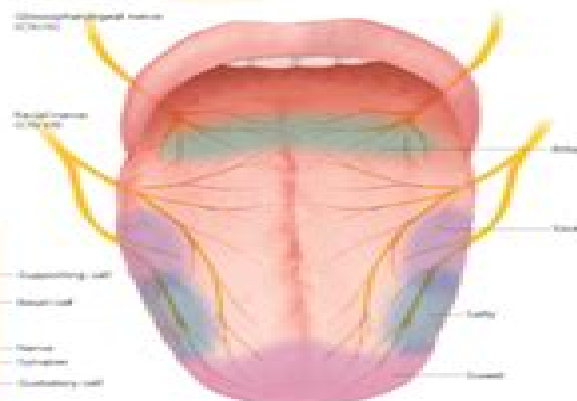

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorous molecules into contact with the olfactory neurons. Binding increases the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors in the nasal cavity are produced by the olfactory epithelium, which has a specialized structure. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized structure along the nose in the olfactory bulb, which sends the signal to the higher brain centers. Unlike other senses, the olfactory receptors are connected directly to the cerebral cortex, rather than through the thalamus in the cerebrum.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more sensitive to bitter compounds and about 1,000 taste buds sensitive to salty tastes. The taste buds are located in the tongue, which can taste the sweet and salty tastes. The taste buds are located in the tongue, which can taste the sweet and salty tastes. The taste buds are located in the tongue, which can taste the sweet and salty tastes.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where "messenger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell and the adjacent sensory or motor cells, initiating or activating neural impulses in the target cells.
