

Rhinoceros Auklet

Diomedea rhinoceros (Pallas)

RANGE: Breeds in North America along the Pacific coast from the Bering Sea and Alaska Peninsula south to central California. Winter from southern Alaska (Admiralty Islands) south to Baja California. Non-breeding in the southern coast of Asia.

STATUS: Common to abundant spring and summer migrant along the coast south to the upper coastal zone. Usually common to very abundant summer migrants along the coast through the State of Oregon where it is numerous. In summer, very rare on the coast south and on the west coast of Vancouver Island, rare in the southern third of Georgia, common to fairly common on the east Florida and west to the coast of Cuba.

CHANGING TO STATUS: In the case of U.S. Marine and Coast Guard, the Rhinoceros Auklet was considered a common species until the mid 1950s when it was listed as a rare species. In the mid 1950s, several breeding colonies had been discovered (see 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959). Since then, several colonies have been discovered since the late 1950s, the species has expanded its breeding range south into Oregon and California. From 1959 to 1964, it was listed as a common species. In 1964, it was listed as a common species. The status of the species was changed to a common species in 1964. This change was due to the increasing number of reports received as well as changing environmental conditions and changes in past species distribution (see 1964, 1965).

Krebs Professor of Zoology University of British Columbia,Edmonton Stan Boutin Professor of Zoology University of Alberta,Rudy Boonstra Professor of Physiology and Zoology University of Toronto,2001-03-31 The boreal forest is one of the world s great ecosystems stretching across North America and Eurasia in an unbroken band and containing about 25% of the world s closed canopy forests The Kluane Boreal Forest Ecosystem Project was a 10 year study by nine of Canada s leading ecologists

to unravel the impact of the snowshoe hare cycle on the plants and the other vertebrate species in the boreal forest In much of the boreal forest the snowshoe hare acts as a keystone herbivore fluctuating in 9 10 year cycles and dragging along secondary cycles in predators such as lynx and great horned owls By manipulating the ecosystem on a large scale from the bottom via fertilizer additions and from the top by predator exclosures they have traced the plant herbivore relationships and the predator prey relationships in this ecosystem to try to answer the question of what drives small mammal population cycles This study is unique in being large scale and experimental on a relatively simple ecosystem with the overall goal of defining what determines community structure in the boreal forest Ecosystem Dynamics of the Boreal Forest The Kluane Project summarizes these findings weaving new discoveries of the role of herbivores turned predators compensatory plant growth and predators eating predators with an ecological story rich in details and clear in its findings of a community where predation plays a key role in determining the fate of individuals and populations The study of the Kluane boreal forest raises key questions about the scale of conservation required for boreal forest communities and the many mammals and birds that live there
