

The Blind Child Who Functions on a Retarded Level: The Challenge for Teacher Preparation

In the early part of this century, it was the consensus of educators of the blind that multiply handicapped blind children should be taught by teachers of the mentally retarded because mental retardation was the primary handicap. However, all too often teachers of the mentally retarded felt that these children should be taught by teachers of the blind, because they were unfamiliar with the techniques used in teaching blind children.

The results of these attitudes are well known. The child is passed back and forth until he passes the age of formal education. He remains with his family until he becomes such a problem that he can no longer be cared for at home. Next he is confined to an institution, becoming a responsibility of the state. Many of the children now in institutions have traveled this route. The challenge is to prevent this from continuing to happen.

We in teacher training must accept the responsibility for our part in perpetuating the idea that teaching should be restricted to single handicapping conditions. However, we, as a professional group, are finally doing something about the situation. The recent rubella epidemic, along with an increasing number of infants surviving with serious handicaps, has made both professionals and non-professionals aware that something must be done for these children who have in the past been denied educational opportunities.

□ Although there are increasing numbers of references to the multiply handicapped child in professional journals, the vast majority of these articles deal with the fact that there are such children, with little discussion of the procedures for educating them. The question is not "Do these children exist?" We know they do. The question should be "What should we do with them?" The answer lies in the procedures teachers should follow to educate these children and what preparation they must have to implement these procedures adequately.

First of all, we in teacher preparation must stop training teachers only for certain categorical handicaps. We must accept our share of the responsibility for perpetuating the erroneous idea that only nice, bright, blind children should be the responsibility of teachers for the blind. We must also accept the responsibility for the patchwork-quilt design of teacher preparation for multiply handicapped children. Preparation for teaching blind students, plus a course in mental retardation, is not adequate background for teaching blind retarded children. The blind child who is functioning on a retarded level is not a blind child plus a retarded child. The two handicaps do not function as addends but as multipliers. When a child has the two together, we can no longer think of separate categories but of cumulative problems. When we
