Bitel,Felice Lifshitz,2013-03-26 In Gender and

Christianity in Medieval Europe six historians explore how medieval people professed Christianity how they performed gender and how the two coincided Many of the daily religious decisions people made were influenced by gender roles the authors contend Women's pious donations for instance were limited by laws of inheritance and marriage customs male clerics behavior depended upon their understanding of masculinity as much as on the demands of liturgy The job of religious practitioner whether as a nun monk priest bishop or some less formal participant involved not only professing a set of religious ideals but also professing gender in both ideal and practical terms The authors also argue that medieval Europeans chose how to be women or men or some complex combination of the two just as they decided whether and how to be religious In this sense religious institutions freed men and women from some of the gendered limits otherwise imposed by society Whereas previous scholarship has tended to focus exclusively either on masculinity or on aristocratic women the authors define their topic to study gender in a fuller and more richly nuanced fashion Likewise their essays strive for a generous definition of religious history which has too often been a history of its most visible participants and dominant discourses In stepping back from received assumptions about religion gender and history and by considering what the terms woman man and religious truly mean for historians the book ultimately enhances our understanding of the gendered implications of every pious thought and ritual gesture of medieval Christians Contributors Dyan Elliott is John Evans Professor of History at Northwestern University Ruth Mazo Karras is professor of history at the University of Minnesota and the general editor of The Middle Ages Series for the University of Pennsylvania Press Jacqueline Murray is dean of arts and professor of history at the University of Guelph Jane Tibbetts Schulenberg is professor of history at the University of Wisconsin Madison
