Harvey Ralphson, 2014-11-11. If Jimmie and Teddy don't return soon, Jack said, changing the subject, we'll have to start the Boy Scout Camera Club out looking for them. They'll be back when they get hungry, laughed the other. But Jimmie and Teddy were still away when the moon rose over the ridge to the east. Mrs. Brady was still by the campfire. She appeared to delight in the companionship of the boys. Having lived alone for years, she would have been delighted at any companionship, whatever, but the boys were full of life and vitality; they were sympathetic, and besides, they were from her old home, New York. As the moon showed her round face over the summit of the range to the east, she arose and stretched out a withered hand to Ned. 'I'm going,' she said. 'I've had a pleasant evening. You don't know how much it has been to me to sit here and talk with you. If you'll come down to my cabin some day, I'll try to make it pleasant for you.' Some day, laughed Ned. 'What do you say to my going'?

right now Of course I ve got to see you home Couldn t think of letting you go away alone I ve walked these mountains night and day for more than twenty years faltered the old lady and I m not afraid now You don t object to my going asked Ned I m awful glad to have you go was the reply But you ll find it a long walk there and back she added If it is too far for me to walk back Ned laughed you may give me a bunk on the floor Anyway I m going to see you home As the boy spoke he beckoned to Frank to step to one side with him
